Hitler Will Join Moves for Peace; Wants Colonies

Ready to Cooperate on Pacts, Place Limit on Arms, He Asserts.

League Censure Flatly Rejected

Next Step Will Be Demand Allies Give Up Areas Taken in War.

Copyright by the United Press.

Berlin, May 21.—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler tonight defied the League of Nations' denunciation of his re-armament program and announced his conscript law would muster women as well as men in defense of the fatherland in time of war.

Hitler, addressing an extraordinary session of the Reichstag, declared that Germany under the present discriminatory attitude of the powers, never would return to the League of Nations.

Der Fuehrer told a cheering Reichstag that his re-armament program was "just a beginning," and hinted that through demands for revision of the treaties he eventually might seek return of the Reich's colonies torn from her in the World War.

Hitler made two references interpreted as bearing on the colonial question.

On one hand he claimed for Germany absolute equality regarding possessions of international importance, which it was believed meant inclusion of the right to possess colonies.

No Action at Present.

On the other hand, however, Hitler expressly declared Germany at the moment would not make any demand for actual possession of a colony.

Hitler, in laying down a 13-point program on foreign policy, asserted flatly that Germany rejects the moral and material restrictions imposed on her under the Versailles Treaty, making her unequal in political and administrative affairs.

He said he intended to seek revision of such limitations, elaborating this reference by asserting that Germany, however, would seek territorial administrative rehabilitation of the Reich, but not by forceful means.

Listeners placed varying interpretations on Der Fuehrer's colonial references and it was not until the propaganda ministry tonight explained that his remarks on equality demands meant purely his armament ambitions that the point was clarified.

Hitler's speech followed announcement that the cabient had approved the defense law, in direct violation of the Versailles Treaty, and calling women to the colors for the fatherland in the "next war."

Exceptions made.

The law said in case of war "every German man and woman would be obliged to serve the Fatherland."

The defense law bare non-Aryans and high Roman Catholics from joining the armed services. Catholics who have been consecrated in posts as high as sub-deacon are exempt. It also provides that "persons liable to conscription living abroad must, in principle, do mili-

McCarl Labels TVA Statute As Haphazard

Kentuckian Invites Texan 'Outside' in Row Over 'Immense' Lobby.

By the Associated Press.

A label of "haphazard legislation" was flung abruptly at the Tennessee Valley Authority act yesterday by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl, in testimony quietly delivered to the same House committee which drafted the law.

"We have gone far enough in this haphazard way," was McCarl's broad indictment, apparently hurled not only at the TVA law but at other recent statutes which do not make it clear whether a Government agency should make purchases through competitive bids or open contracts.

McCarl did not return to the stand at the afternoon session. The committee instead heard an assertion by Arthur V. Davis, chairman of the board of the Aluminum Co. of America, that the proposed expansion of TVA activities might cause the company—a Mellon interest—to abandon its aluminum and power development program in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Maverick Cries "Fraud."

The comptroller appeared before the Military Committee after internal dissension over charge of fraud and irregularity in TVA brought a sharp challenge from one Democratic member for another to step "outside."

Representative May (Democrat), Kentucky, snapped the dare at Representative Maverick (Democrat), Texas, after the Texan leveled charges of "fraud" and "outrage" at extracts the Kentuckian ordered taken from a TVA audit by McCarl's office.

May told the committee he had asked a friend, in the National Coal Association, to mimeograph extracts selected from the audit at his request by Col. James E. Cassidy. But May said C. A. Beasley, counsel for the Alabama Power Co., who was in his office at the time, offered to have the work done.

"I don't have utility and coal officials sitting around my office," Maverick interposed.

"Is that intended as a personal remark?" May retorted.

"You can figure it out any way

Taxi 'March' On Congress To Urge NRA

Fleet of 500 Cabs Will Take Business Men to Capitol.

Newest Sort of Lobbying Timed Just Before Bonus Veto.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Pressure generated for two-year extension of the NRA at today's convention of business representatives will be released on Congress in the form of a taxicab "march" on Capitol Hill, it became known last night.

Adopting tactics made famous by Marshal Joffre in the defense of Paris in 1914, leaders of the NRA meeting arranged for 500 taxicabs to take delegates from Constitution Hall to the halls of Congress after a preliminary session this morning.

The "march" will come just before the visit of President Roosevelt to the House of Representatives, where he will deliver his bonus veto message in person. The business men will buttonhole their Senators and Representatives in one of the most unusual "pressure drives" in recent history.

1,500 Delegates Claimed.

Meantime, Donald R. Richberg, chairman of the NRA board, yesterday argued before the House Ways and Means Committee that the President should be given the power to impose codes on recalcitrant industries. He intimated that trouble may be experienced in revising the more than 600 codes if, and when, NRA is extended.

The Industries and Business Committee for NRA Extension, which called the convention, renewed its forecast yesterday of 1,500 delegates at today's meeting. Representatives will be present from fully 150 coded industries, employing more than 5,000,000 workers, according to a statement over the name of Ward Cheney, chairman.

Another statement issued by committee headquarters here returned to the attack on Senate Progressives who have been fighting two-year NRA extension. This statement likewise was in the name of Cheney, a silk manufacturer, despite the fact he has not been in Washington for more than a week.

200 Cabs to Meet Trains.

A special train from New York, bringing 400 New England clothing manufacturers, will arrive at 8:50 a. m., according to John Loesser, of New York, who is assisting Cheney in arrangements. A fleet of 200 taxicabs will be on hand to take them at once to Constitution Hall.

The meeting will get under way between 9:30 and 10 o'clock, he stated, with an address by Cheney the only item on the program. Immediately thereafter, the entire convention will embark in taxicabs for the mile journey to the Capitol. The purpose, it was freely stated, will be to lobby for the Administration's two-year bill.

Delegates wil reconvene at 2 p. m. for a program that will emphasize advantages of the NRA for the "small business man," it was declared. A number of speakers will be heard, including trade association executives, after which resolutions supporting the NRA are expected to be adopted.

Borah, King, Nye Hit.

In reply to Senators Borah, King and Nye, who had charged that the whole movement was instigated by code officials in an effort to maintain their salaries, the Cheney statement invited a Senate inspection of the committee's records.

By inference, the statement charged that Senator Nye, in reading mailing lists of the committee into the Senate record Monday, had been using records "pilfered" from the committee's files.

"These Senators have talked about large finances in our effort and some one has committeed the unspeakable act of pilfering perfectly innocent and proper mailing lists from our office files," the statement said.

"Let me tell Senator Nye this: There is no secret about our financing. We will show our complete records to any Senate committee and the amount of money we have

1860—Jane Addams—1935

Jane Addams, Peace Crusader And Foe of Slums, Dead at 74

Famous Founder of Hull House Loses Valiant Fight for Life After Operation at Chicago; Co-Winner of Nobel Prize.

By the United Press.

Chicago, May 21.—Jane Addams, world-famous welfare worker, died tonight after a courageous fight for recovery from a major operation. The founder of internationally famous Hull House, co-winner of the 1931 Nobel Peace Prize and "first citizen" of Chicago, had been a semi-invalid for most of the last ten years. She was in her seventy-fifth year.

On Saturday, Miss Addams underwent an abdominal operation. She rallied later but early today suffered a relapse and, her condition aggravated by a chronic heart ailment, she fell into a coma.

Although her condition was critical, hope had been held that she would recover until just before dawn today. Physicians counted on her courage, which had seen her through two previous major operations and a series of illnesses since childhood.

Ignored Pleas to Retire.

Social service workers from Hull House, which brought Miss Addams her original fame as a model for settlement houses and which observed its fifty-fifth anniversary May 9, declared that in spite of almost constant invalidism through the last ten years their leader had refused urgent pleas that she give up her arduous campaigns for peace and governmental reforms.

Only two weeks ago, they pointed out, she had insisted on attending a conference of the Women's League for Peace and Freedom, of which she had been international president, at Washington.

Although Jane Addams' life was dedicated to the cause of peace, hers was a career of militancy against the stupidities of modern life. One of the great reformers of all time, it was not war alone that she would banish from the world. "The stupid atrocities of contemporary life, its arid waste, its meaningless labor, its needless suffering and its political corruption," she once listed as the public enemies against whcih she directed the force of her spirit, and it was out of a hatred for these

Mine Studied By First Lady, 2 Miles Down

Mrs. Roosevelt Refuses to Phone White House From Depths.

By the United Press.

Bellaire, Ohio, May 21.—Standing with one foot on a pile of coal, under a mountain two and a half miles from daylight, the President's wife today discussed wages and working conditions, safety precautions and mining methods, with miners black with coal dust.

Pleased with her trip down into a drift mine, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt emerged with a lot of information, but not a smudge on her face. She watched operation of the big loading machines and heard the explosions of powder, but engaged in no "stunts" herself.

While the rest of her party wore overalls, Mrs. Roosevelt just borrowed a big gray overcoat and a miner's cap and got into the first of six coal cars that had been neatly covered with burlap for the visiting party, which included State and county officials, union representatives, mine managers, educational and religious leaders.

The trip down into the mine was

Work-Relief Plan Pushed By Roosevelt

Amid Bitter Protests on Wage Scale, He Calls Heads to Parley.

Approval of Billion in Projects Expected in Short Time.

By Felix Bruner.

Amid charges that he is establishing "sweat shop" wages for works relief workers, President Roosevelt yesterday was proceeding with plans for putting the $4,000,000,000 program in operation.

Late in the day he called to the White House the "big three" in the works set-up for a two-and-a-half-hour conference. With them was Joseph P. Kennedy, head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who has set in on a number of works conferences. The "big three" are Harry L. Hopkins, head of the works division; Secretary Ickes, head of the allotment board, and Frank C. Walker, head of the division of applications and information.

It is expected the President will begin announcing at once his approval of more than $1,000,000,000 in projects recomended nearly a week ago by the allotment board, with a view of putting men to work soon. Thus far, with the exception of executive and clerical workers, no one has been employed under the program. The allotment board will meet again Thursday.

Green Fears Unrest.

Disappointed because the arbitrary wages set up in the President's order are far below prevailing scales, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, expressed the fear they would result in "great social unrest."

"There is certain to be discontent," Green said, "and I would not be surprised if it led even to widespread strikes among relief workers."

Green said the wages were based on a wrong premise and should be fixed not on a basis of zones and populations but on the basis of actual conditions in individual communities. He also criticized the provision that only one member of a family can be employed.

"I don't believe," he said, "that one worker earning $19 a month should be expected to support a family of four or five."

The wage schedule runs from $19 a month to $94 a month, depending on the skill of the worker and the locality in which he works.

Because there are four classifications as to skill, considerable leeway exists in grading workers. This is left up to the Works Progress Division, which will determine how many workers will be employed in each bracket.

Some to Get More.

Exceptions contained in the President's order, including workers engaged on PWA projects and in construction of Government buildings, will mean that a considerable number of persons taken from relief rolls will receive more than the prescribed rate. Secretary Ickes said present PWA scales would be maintained.

There also were reports that there may be a revision in the wage schedule if practice shows it is not high enough or if the cost of living goes up. There was nothing in the President's order, however, to indicate such a revision is contemplated.

Vigorous disapproval of the wages for professional and technical men fixed by the President's order was voiced by the National Society of Professional Engineers. Willard S. Conlon, treasurer and acting secretary of the society, predicted the rates will destroy the already weakened morale of the profession and would lower its standards.

The Virginia Federation of Labor adopted a resolution objecting to the State's being put in the group with next to the lowest wages. John Hopkins Hall, chairman of the legislative committee, said "this is not a protest against President Roosevelt, but against his ill-advised advisers."

Huey Defeats Self When He Quits Chamber During Harangue.

By Robert C. Albright.

Smashing through a one-man filibuster by Huey Long, the Senate last night voted President Roosevelt the unprecedented right to address both houses of Congress today on his bonus veto.

The vote was 44 to 4. It brought Louisiana's Kingfish the worst licking of his Senate career and measurably strengthened the President's hand in his fight to check bonus legislation of an inflationary type.

It was Huey's own lack of knowledge of Senate rules that dealt him defeat in his single-handed holdout against a joint session to hear the President. Unwittingly he broke his own five-hour filibuster by temporarily leaving the chamber after demanding a quorum call.

Speak at 12:30.

When he came back, Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, commanded the floor. Desperately Huey tried to retrieve his loss by loud points of order that Vice President Garner promptly overruled. The Louisianan's voice was drowned as a string of "aye" votes sounded approval of today's joint session.

The President will take the rostrum of the House at 12:30 p. m. to set forth in strong terms his reasons for vetoing the $2,200,000,000 Patman bonus bill. Long before Huey's filibuster fizzled to a finish in the Senate, the White House made known the President's intention of addressing the House, regardless of Senate attendance. His appearance will mark the first personal delivery of a veto message by any President.

Only three Senators joined Long in opposing the concurrent resolution for today's joint session. They were Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, and Senator Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, both irreconcilable Republican critics of the President, together with Senator Frederick Steiwer (Republican), of Oregon, who opposed the resolution on constitutional grounds.

Thirty-seven Democrats, 6 Republicans and 1 Progressive voted for the joint session.

Dinners Interrupted.

It took 30 minutes and the heavy hand of the sergeant at arms to muster this vote. Senator Long had served notice of an all-night filibuster and most Senators were leisurely eating a late dinner when the final vote came at 7:15 p. m.

Repeated calls of the roll failed to produce more than 47 Senators, shy one vote of a quorum. At 7:45, the deciding ballot burst headlong through the aisle door. It was Sen-

Three Killed In Race Tests On Speedway

Stubblefield, Whittaker and Hannon Die at Indianapolis Track.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, May 21.—Three men rode to their deaths at the Indianapolis motor speedway today while preparing for the 500-mile automobile race May 30.

W. H. (Stubby) Stubblefield, 27, veteran Los Angeles pilot, leaped the wall on the southwest turn late today while nearing completion of his 25-mile qualifying run and was injured fatally. Leo Whittaker, a neighbor of Stubblefield, riding with him as mechanic, died with the little driver who had finished every 500-mile race he started.

Big Johnny Hannon, who came out of Norristown, Pa., as the Eastern dirt track champion to try his fortune on the rough brick course here, was killed earlier in the day when he lost control of his mount in the third turn. Oscar Reeves, Indianapolis, his riding mechanic, was taken to a hospital, where he was said be in serious condition tonight.

Death Toll Now 30.

It was one of the worst days for fatalities in the history of the track, which has been operating since 1909, and brought the total number of deaths at the speedway in that time to 30. Twenty-six of the victims have been drivers and mechanics; four were spectators.

Drivers blamed Hannon's death on speedway inexperience, for he was making his first fast drive at the wheel around the two-and-one-half mile oval course.

Hannon never finished that first lap. Tire marks on the course showed he rode high into the turn and nosed down to the inner wall, where he began a long skid which ended when he crashed through the concrete retaining wall on the upper edge of the track. He was thrown clear of his car. Reeves, the mechanic, still was in the car but unconscious when aid approached.

What happened to Stubblefield never will be known. He had completed six of the 10 laps of his 25-mile qualifying trial just before sunset at an average speed of approximately 117 miles an hour. Suddenly the car skidded as the veteran eased into the turn, shot

$21,000,000 Securities Missing After Suicide

Boston, May 21 (AP).—Attorney General Paul A. Dever tonight asserted that nearly $21,000,000 in securities of two corporations affiliated with C. D. Parker and Co., dominated by millionaire banker Bowen C. Tufts until his suicide last month, was missing. He said that less than $100,000 was left out of the huge sum for investors in the two corporations — Seaboard Utilities Shares, and Railroad Shares.

Price of Hogs Hits Top of $10

Porkers Reach Highest Figure in Chicago Since October, 1930.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 21.—The once lowly hog assumed a position of financial importance today.

Hog prices here swept up 25 cents in active buying to a top of $10, the highest in 55 months—since October, 1930. It was also 10 cents above the previous 1935 peak.

The spectacular advance was reflected in other primary markets and was more than welcome through the corn belt. It was attributable to the old law of supply and demand. Only 9,000 porkers were received here and with Monday's 11,660 arrivals the two-day supply in Chicago and seven other leading markets was the smallest in a generation. It failed to meet immediate requirements.

One of the major factors in the curtailment of shipments was the Government's 1934 campaign to reduce the hog population.

With the processing tax of $2.25 a hundredweight considered, the average price paid by packers today was approximately $11.90. This compared with an average of $12.40 during 1926, the generally accepted goal of the Agricultural Administration. Today's top of $10 plus the processing levy set packers back $12.25. They have not paid so much since pre-depression days.

Cattle and sheep were comparatively quiet.

This is the fourth installment of "The American Messiahs," by the Unofficial Observer, author of the "New Dealers," which appeared last year. While "The American Messiahs" does not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post, it is commended as a most candid discussion of the mavericks, the reformers and the radio spellbinders now booming their way across the American political stage.

III.

The inventions of Hertz, Marconi and DeForest have enabled Father Coughlin to reach incomparably the widest congregation of any preacher recorded in history. His files contain about 5,000,000 names and addresses, catalogued according to State and county, from which he hopes to build up his National Union for Social Justice to an active membership of more than 5,000,000. In the spring of 1934 he discontinued his broadcasts for a while, but started them again in the autumn, when he began the organization of his National Union, itself a proceeding strikingly reminiscent of the formation of postwar Catholic political parties in Europe. The response was so great that he got enough money to keep him at the microphone through the winter and spring.

For Coughlin is now a major political power in North America. With his enormous regular audience—greater than that of any member of his church in the past or present—and his rapidly growing National Union for Social Justice he is treated with marked respect when he appears before a congressional committee. He has already influenced national politics, in the campaign of 1932. He visited Roosevelt at Albany in the late summer of 1932 and stalked up and down the study of the gingerbread Governor's Mansion, telling F. D. R. what he should do and say. Part of his advice was to go easy in handling Jimmy Walker, who was on trial before Gov. Roosevelt's commission at that time. Later on, Roosevelt repaid Coughlin by stopping off in Detroit on a Sunday and delivering a sermon on "Social Jus-

Court Refuses to Jail Beard Pending Gaming Case Appeal

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday turned down an application by United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett to have Sam Beard and his co-defendants in the recent gambling trial committed to jail.

As a result of the court's decision, Beard and the others will remain at liberty under bond pending their appeal from the verdict in the District Supreme Court, which found them guilty on several counts.

In denying the application of Garnett and his assistant, Roger Robb, Associate Justices Hitz and Groner of the Court of Appeals said:

"The trial justice was of the opinion that the appeal involved a substantial question to be determined by this court on appeal. In view of this, and without the assistance of the trial record, we would not be warranted in reaching the conclusion that the order allowing bail, was improvidently made."

Inasmuch as the application for committment was denied without prejudice, there is nothing to prevent Garnett and Robb from renewing the application when there is a change in the case.

The appellate court divided the request into three divisions. One revolved about the wire tapping angle of the case; a second concerned the improper admission of evidence connected with an unauthorized search and seizure of equipment, and the last dealt with the charge that there was no direct evidence that either property or money had been involved in wagers listened to over tapped wires.

These questions, the court held, were substantial and entitled the trial justice to admit the defendants to bail.

Clear Knight Victor as 5,000 See Hagerstown Racing Return

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

Hagerstown, Md., May 21.—Horse racing under that homey atmosphere that is known only to the smaller tracks was welcomed to the ancient Hagerstown Fair Grounds today by a crowd of 5,000. Although the program was run over a sticky, heavy track, conditions otherwise were ideal. After a night of rain, a bright sun came over the Blue Ridge Mountains to participate in the carnival spirit which always marks the sport of kings in western Maryland.

Age and experience were served in the day's feature race—the Harry E. Bester Memorial—a sprint of five furlongs named for the man who revived racing in this section. The winning combination was that of Clear Knight, listed in the record books as a 6-year-old black gelding, and Clarence Jackson, as black as his mount and "over 40" by his own admission.

The veteran Jackson, who was riding horses before some of his rival jockeys were born, had Clear Knight away winging and made every post a winning one. In the wild scramble that went on in back of him, Vanda Cerulea emerged to take the second money by a head from Blue Zip. The last named suffered most in the interference that marked the turns.

Clear Knight, which led several fields only to fold up in the stretch during the major Maryland season, was in his glory at the short sprint route and in the heavy going. The time of 1:05 was fair under the conditions and the mutuel of $3.90 was all that could be expected.

Labor Bill Vote Waits Sanction Of Roosevelt

Byrns and O'Connor Hope for Speedy Approval of Disputes Measure.

By the Associated Press.

One obstacle, the need of a presidential indorsement, was all that stood tonight in the path of a speedy House vote on the Wagner labor disputes bill, already passed by the Senate.

With an eye to getting the indorsement, Speaker Byrns and Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the House Rules Committee plan to discuss the measure with Mr. Roosevelt, but have not been given a definite place yet on the White House calling list.

Chairman Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the Labor Committee left the White House Monday, however, saying he was convinced the President strongly favors the bill.

His committee unanimously reported the measure favorably yesterday after writing in an amendment that would put a proposed permanent National Labor Relations Board in the Labor Department instead of designating it an independent government agency. Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, author of the bill, has argued for the latter and Secretary Perkins for the former.

Connery said he would introduce today a resolution asking for a rule under which the measure would be brought before the House for consideration. He said he anticipated little difficulty in getting the rule.

The bill would put in permanent law the right of labor to bargain collectively with employers, ban company domination of unions, and specifically designate five "unfair labor practices," such as coercion of employes in their efforts to organize.

Connery said that as amended the bill would make decisions of the Labor Board reviewable only by the courts and would not permit the Labor Secretary to appoint its personnel.

Although it previously had approved an almost identical measure by its chairman, the House Labor Committee decided to report out the Wagner bill in order to steer the legislation around parliamentary jams.

like a meteor up the track, skimmed over the retaining wall and apparently turned end-over-end until it stopped—a battered mass of steel against a wire fence.

The front wheels were knocked off. Both Stubblefield and Whittaker were thrown clear of the car and still breathing when an ambulance reached the scene. They died en-route to a hospital.

Stapp Sets Speed.

George Connor, of San Francisco, Calif., a newcomer here; A. B. (Deacon) Litz, of Dubois, Pa., and Egbert (Babe) Stapp, of Los Angeles, qualified their cars between the time Hannon was killed and Stubblefield's accident. Stapp drove the fastest trial of the day, averaging 116.736 miles an hour for the 25 miles. Litz speeded over the distance at 114.488 miles an hour, while Connor's average was 114.321.

The ill luck which has followed Kelly Petillo, Los Angeles pilot, since he has been preparing for the 1935 race, worked against him again today when his motor virtually went to pieces just as he was completing the ninth lap of his qualifying trial. He had averaged approximately 117 miles an hour, with top speed on the sixth lap, when he careened about the bricks at 118.483 miles an hour.

$27,000 Down the Sink; Wage Scales in Real Danger; Cotton Ed Joins Up With AAA.

By Raymond Clapper

CONSIDERABLE outcry is on the way over the Administration's schedule of work relief wages. In part it will be sincere and in part it will be a shedding of crocodile tears over labor for political reasons.

Between the two, the Administration is in for a rough ride.

The fight had its origin in the testimony of Admiral Peoples during hearings on the works relief bill in the House. He said the plan was to give relief workers a "security wage," which, he estimated, would average about $50 per month. Labor screamed in horror. Such a relief wage would break down private wage scales through the country and grind labor down to a starvation wage.

Senator McCarran, a Nevada Democrat with a piping voice and a bull neck, lunged at the scheme. He offered the now famous "McCarran amendment" to the works bill, which would have required the Government to pay relief wages approximating the prevailing wage in private industry in given communities. It passed, but the Administration was able to break it down after prolonged committee reconsideration and a promise that it would try to avoid demoralization of private wages. Republicans who had not given a sympathetic thought to labor in years joined up with labor and made political hay.

That commotion was all on the tip that the Administration was planning a wage relief scale averaging $50 a month.

Now the Administration has announced the scale of pay for the 3,500,000 men it expects to put to work. That scale ranges from $19 to $94 a month. It doesn't average anywhere near $50 a month because the great numbers of employes will be in the lower brackets. The top figures are reserved for professional and technical persons. Of the 20 classifications in unskilled labor, all except 2 rate $50 per month or less. Of the 20 groups in the intermediate class, 14 rate $50 per month or less. Six of the 20 groups in the skilled workers classfication will receive $50 or less.

* * * *

One Republican who fought for the McCarran amendment predicts that these wage rates will make work relief highly unpopular. Whereas a week ago Republicans were worried over the political advantage in the $4,000,000,000 relief chest, they now can visualize the cry "$19 a month for security."

They say it won't be popular with those who have drawn as much or more on relief without working. Well, the Administration doesn't worry about that. Its purpose is to drive relief workers back to private employment. The real trouble will come over the danger to established wage scales in private employment, plus the fact that firms which supply materials will gather in their usual profits.

Compared with other things that have happened it was only a minor matter, but still the Internal Revenue Bureau hasn't been anxious to advertise the fact that 3,000,000 cotton tags, issued under the Bankhead act, had to be thrown away. They weighed 24 tons. These little metal tags, about the size of a quarter, were part of a stock of 22,000,000 laid in by the tax collectors.

Each bale of cotton had to have one before it could be passed. Because of uncertainty as to the amount of cotton in various warehouse centers, extra supplies were distributed. The surplus tags later were carefully counted and, after a certified report was made, were dumped in the river. Eight tons are said to have gone into the Potomac, the remainder being destroyed elsewhere. Being metal, they sank, but not without trace. Net loss, $27,000—a mere trifle.

The fight of Senate Progressives against Senator Chavez, of New Mexico, had repercussions as far away as Denver, where a mayoralty election was held yesterday.

One of the candidates was supported by the Costigan organization. Senator Costigan, of Colorado had fought the Chavez contest against the late Senator Cutting. So the night before the Denver election, a few hours after Senator Chavez was seated and when it was too late for anyone to challenge him or wage reprisal, his brother went up from New Mexico to Denver and made a political speech against the pro-Costigan candidate for mayor.

Behind the speech of Senator Tydings, Maryland's Democratic bachelor, proposing an international conference at Washington to consider war debts, disarmament, stabilization and tariff barriers, is the shadow of a man who, almost unknown to the general public, has made international history. He is Salmon O. Levinson, Chicago lawyer. It was he who, moving between Washington and European capitals, midwifed the idea of the Kellogg peace pact and saw it finally signed by all leading nations of the world.

The fact that this pact has become a scrap of paper has not discouraged Levinson. He came here several weeks ago and began talking among Senators about his plan for settling the war debts. Senator Tydings once made the mistake of writing a book on the subject and Levinson sought him out. Tydings has his own ideas but he has been converted to some of Levinson's too and was enthusiastic enough to make a Senate speech.

There is no flicker of Administration interest in the plan but neither was there any when Levinson first came to Washington with his outlawry of war idea which culminated in the Kellogg pact. Senator Borah was one of his champions then. He's against this one.

The engineer who was responsible for the plan to harness the tides at Passamaquoddy has been elbowed out of a chance to participate in the realization of his dream. He is Dexter Cooper, a brother of Hugh Cooper, who built Muscle Shoals. Dexter has a summer home at Campobello Island, near President Roosevelt's summer place, and close to Passamaquoddy Bay. He built a miniature tide-harnessing electric power plant on his estate to prove the big Quoddy project is practicable.

Cooper made countless trips to Washington in behalf of the plan, organized a company, sought to borrow PWA money, but, failing to convince Washington that the tide-harnessing plant could be made to pay for itself, he was turned down.

But under the works relief program, the Government is going to build the plant itself. Cooper, who knows more about the scheme than any other man, may squeeze into the picture as a consultant. But the real building job was turned over to the War Department. Army engineers are already at work. Secretary of War Dern is flying to Maine right away to turn the first spadeful of earth. Engineer Cooper sees his dream-child fading out of his grasp.

First Lady Credited As Rival Attraction

By the Associated Press.

Boston, May 21.—Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt was recognized today by the Massachusetts League of Women Voters as a serious rival attraction.

In a report to the fifteenth annual convention of the league, Mrs. Trueworthy White, chairman of publicity, thus accounted for poor attendance at last year's convention:

"The real reason was the impolite collision with the First Lady of the land. She came off with the best of it as far as audiences were concerned."

Mrs. Roosevelt came to Boston last October unexpectedly to attend a Girl Scout gathering.

McCarl Labels TVA and Other ActsHaphazard

you please," said the stocky World War veteran.

"I'll figure it out outside if you want," the Kentuckian flashed back, taking off his glasses, but Maverick only replied sarcastically: "I'm afraid of you."

A few moments later Maverick nearly started another fistic encounter when he interjected that Cassidy ought to be thrown out of the committee room.

But as the session broke up for noon recess, the three left separately and amicably, with May telling reporters he had instructed the official reporter to expunge the tilt with Maverick from the record if the latter approved.

Charges "Immense" Lobby.

Maverick, however, promptly got out a formal statement charging:

"An immense crooked lobby is trying to defeat the TVA. It is rotten and disgraceful."

May was using the material from McCarl's audit, which criticized many TVA expenditures as unsanctioned by law, as ammunition for his fight against legislation to expand TVA operations by giving the organization specific authority to sell surplus power.

The audit was attacked by Arthur F. Morgan, TVA chairman, as showing a lack of complete investigation of facts and making unjust comparisons.

Summoned to discuss it, McCarl refused to get mixed up in the committee fight but hit at "haphazard" laws. He said he would propose an amendment to the TVA act to require the agency to operate under a competitive bidding system.

Iowa Democratic Head Fined $500 on Charge

Des Moines, Iowa, May 21 (A.P.).—Eugene J. Feuling, Iowa Democratic chairman, today pleaded guilty to a charge of failing to report all campaign contributions and was fined $500.

The Democratic State leader appeared before District Judge Russell Jordan without counsel and changed a plea of not guilty to guilty.

After paying the fine, fleuling issued a statement expressing regret that he was "guilty of technical law violation."

The chairman was indicted by the Polk County grand jury on charges of failing to report campaign contributions received between March 1, 1934 and August 1, 1934.

Roper Urges Planning In Ohio Society Talk

New York, May 21 (A.P.).—Nationwide planning and researches in agricultural, industrial and foreign trade problems were advocated tonight by Secretary of Commerce Roper in an address before the Ohio Society of New York.

"We have operated too long as individuals and in individual units with only personal or individual group advancement in mind," he declared.

There is, he said, a great need for localities, State and industries to turn toward research in seeking better business methods and in meeting governmental problems through co-operative efforts.

Testify Before Lyddane Grand Jury

Lyddane Probe Ended, Verdict Coming Today

Grand Jury Indictment Asked on 2 Charges of Plots to Kill.

The report of the grand jury which investigated the murder-conspiracy charges against Mrs. Anne Lyddane will be delivered at 9:30 a. m. today in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

At that time, before Judge Charles H. Woodward, the jury will announce whether it has indicted Mrs. Lyddane or decided to ignore the charge that she conspired with others to kill her husband, Francis Lyddane.

State's Attorney James H. Pugh, who yesterday completed the presentation of testimony to the investigating body, is seeking the indictment of Mrs. Lyddane on two counts; first, that she conspired to kill her husband, and, second, that she conspired to kill Mrs. Josephine Beall, of Darnestown.

Bealls Chief Witnesses.

Mrs. Beall and her husband, Arthur Beall, a garage man, were the principal witnesses to appear before the grand jury yesterday. Both refused to discuss their testimony when they were excused from the grand jury room.

The Bealls left the courthouse together. Mrs. Beall named Mrs. Lyddane as corespondent in a divorce action she filed against her husband two years ago. The suit was withdrawn and the couple was reconciled.

State's Attorney Pugh is seeking an indictment on the grounds that Mrs. Lyddane conspired to kill Mrs. Beall, despite the fact that this charge was ignored at a preliminary hearing several weeks ago.

Typewriter Is "Witness."

A silent "witness" for the grand jury was a typewriter on which Mrs. Lyddane is alleged to have written two notes found in the possession of one of the men charged with being involved in the plot. This typewriter came from the Rockville Bank where Mrs. Lyddane was employed.

Other witnesses who appeared before the jury yesterday were James McDonough, a house painter who is a neighbor of the Bealls at Darnestown, and George C. Esworthy, understood to be from Darnestown. The nature of their testimony could not be learned.

In addition to seeking the indictment of Mrs. Lyddane, the State also is trying to indict Edwin H. Davis and John M. Borland, both of whom are held at Rockville Jail.

In all, 29 witnesses were heard in the two-day probe. On order from Judge Woodward, news photographers and reporters were banned from the floor of the grand jury room. This was an unusual procedure.

Senate D. C. Committee Will Meet Tomorrow

The Senate District Committee will meet at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to dispose of several pending bills, among them the divorce and public utility appeal measures.

Action on the reappointment of Richmond B. Keech as a member of the Public Utilities Commission may await another meeting, it was said, as his present term does not expire until July. No opposition to confirmation of the appointment has arisen, however.

10 Per Cent Offered To Settle War Debt

Proposal in Parliament Would End Matter.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 21.—A specific figure for settlement "once and for all" of the war debts to the United States was named for the first time today in the House of Commons when a 10 per cent figure was proposed.

Col. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, pioneer aviator and former parliamentary secretary of transport, urged the 10 per cent settlement to end "a growing sore on the other side of the Atlantic."

"It is natural for an American citizens to ask why it is not and can not be paid," he asserted.

"We know perfectly well we never received any money," he said, but pointed out that "we went guarantee" on goods supplied to the allies.

"Let us make a gesture and offer £100,000,000 (about $500,000,000) in gold and in return get a cancellation of all debts of all the allies throughout the world," he pleaded.

Illinois House Holds Up Relief Before July 1

Emergency Vote Fails Fifth Time to Make Funds Available Now.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., May 21.—Hopes of Illinois' 1,200,000 jobless for early resumption of relief were dashed late today and they faced the prospect of receiving no Federal or State aid again until July 1.

The first blow came with failure of the House of Representatives to adopt a bill increasing the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent by an emergency majority of 102. Passage would have provided relief funds immediately. A caucus of the Democratic majority then decided to enact the legislation by a majority of 77, which would make it effective July 1.

No provision was made for food for the needy in the meantime. Harry Hopkins, FERA administrator, has repeatedly warned he would send no more Federal grants to the State until it advances $3,000,000 a month as its share of the relief costs. But Senator James Hamilton Lewis, Illinois Democrat, who has been in touch with Hopkins' office, has expressed the opinion Government money would be sent to Illinois when the tax bill is passed, regardless of its effective date.

Wilfred Reynolds, executive secretary of the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission, stated at Chicago:

"The I. E. R. C. is at the absolute end of its rope."

The commission estimated 125,000 families in Cook County (Chicago) and 100,000 down-State had exhausted the last of cash food orders supplied by the commission. The Illinois Workers Alliance claimed 3,000 persons had joined in a hunger march in Springfield today.

Administration leaders, unable to muster the 102 votes in five roll calls in the three weeks the State has been denied Government allotments, planned to adopt the revised measure tomorrow. They gained four votes today when the unofficial count stood at 94 to 54 in their favor when balloting was suspended.

The legislative session was one of the most dramatic in recent years. The chamber rang with bitter recrimination. A demonstrative but orderly procession of jobless from many sections of the State shouted demands for renewal of aid as they were escorted to an outlying park by police. Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago and Patrick Nash, Democratic national committeeman from Illinois, who threw the force of their influence behind the rejected legislation, looked on from a crowded gallery.

Slaying Evidence Jolts Steinmetz

Refuses to View Garments Wife Wore When Slain.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 21.—The garments worn by his 17-year-old bride when she fell mortally wounded before a fusillade of bullets were introduced in evidence today at the murder trial of Joseph Steinmetz, 22-year-old divinity student.

Steinmetz, who is charged with slaying both his wife and the Rev. Joseph Leonard when he found them together in a hotel room last November 26, used both hands to shield his eyes from the sight.

Testimony tending to support the defense contention that Steinmetz was under great emotional strain at the time was adduced from Detective William R. Holzherr, who testified on cross-examination that the youth was too nervous to appear in the police lineup next morning.

Detective John P. Gilman told of finding two cartridges and a wedding ring in Steinmetz's vest pocket. The prosecution is attempting to establish that the young woman had returned the ring to her husband and was planning to return home.

Memorial Honors Six Congressmen

Services Held in House for Last Year's Dead.

By the Associated Press.

Memorial services were held in the House yesterday for six Congressmen who have died in the last year. The dead who were honored included:

Speaker Henry T. Rainey of Illinois; Senator Bronson Cutting of New Mexico, and Representatives Thomas C. Coffin of Idaho, Frederick Landis of Indiana, Anthony J. Griffin of New York, and George F. Brumm of Pennsylvania.

The memorial addresses were delivered by Representative Woodrum of Virginia, for the Democrats, and Representative Gifford of Massachusetts for the Republicans.

Nepotism Abolishment Is Urged by Mitchell

Arguments in favor of abolishing nepotism from Capitol Hill were presented before the House Committee on Accounts yesterday by Representative J. R. Mitchell (Democrat), of Tennessee.

"They gave me an attentive hearing," he declared, "but I must say they didn't appear unduly enthusiastic."

Action was deferred when Mitchell proposed to amend his bill, or present a companion measure, which would prevent the hiring of relatives in Government bureaus as well as by members of Congress.

Studies of Jane Addams on Visit Here

Underwood & Underwood.

Miss Jane Addams, 75-year-old social service worker, who died in Chicago yesterday, is pictured in three of her most recent photographs, made in Washington while she was attending the celebration of the Women's International League for Peace, this month.

Jane Addams, Noted Worker For Peace, Dies

Death Comes to Leader in Hospital Near Her Famed Hull House.

stupidities that Hull House and the International League for Peace and Freedom, her two great monuments, grew.

Her ambition was to complete "the mobilization of the human spirit" by bettering, if not fundamentally changing, the life of the world. Her desire for reform swept aside all barriers of race or religion as she spread her plea for decency and tolerance throughout the world. Everywhere her name was known and honored as a great social worker, as a defender of the rights of the downtrodden, and as one who would remove the scourge of arms from all nations.

Born in Illinois.

She was born, nearly 75 years ago, in a small Illinois town called Cedarville. When she died she had arisen from the obscurity of that hamlet to a position of honor conferred upon her by impoverished tenement dwellers of Chicago and by those who sit in the seats of the mighty, directing the affairs of nations.

Her father was a mill-owner, and there in Cedarville she lived in a large house. When driving with her father she passed the squalid houses, tenements, and shacks which surrounded the source of his income. Often she would see even more degrading sights as they entered the city of Chicago. It was early in her life that she decided that her work was to be toward elimination of the defects in a system which allowed human beings to live amid such squalor and filth.

Her Father Knew Lincoln.

Her parents were Quakers, and while she was affiliated with no one church she was a deeply religious woman. Her mother, Sarah, died soon after she was born; but her father, John Addams, lavished as much love and attention as he could upon his daughter. A miller, a banker, an assemblyman and friend of Abraham Lincoln, he exerted great influence upon the frail and lonely girl.

Early in her childhood, Jane Addams was afflicted with curvature of the spine, and this deformity, she once said, made her shrink from appearing in public with her father, lest he be chagrined by having it known that this "ugly duckling" was his. She was brought up at home until she was 17, when she entered the Rockford Female Seminary. In 1881 she was one of four girls graduated on the day the seminary became Rockford College.

"I knew that when I grew up," she later said, "I would have a large home." She was thinking of the ramshackles near her father's mill, of the grisly streets of Chicago. "But it would not be among other large homes," she added, "it would be right in the midst of these dirty homes." Hull House stands thus.

Reform Zeal Came Early.

The dream of reform was early born in her. But ill-health drove her abroad and she first thought that she could best serve mankind through medicine, which she studied both abroad and in this country. For six months she lay strapped to a bed following an operation upon her spine. And then, in London, she visited Toynbee Hall.

This, the first of the world's great social settlements, crystallized her convictions. She saw in Chicago the place for her own large home. One day in April, 1888, she disclosed her plans and her hopes to her close friend and schoolmate, Ellen Star Gates. Her mind crowded with the unsavory sights of London streets and fully cognizant that, in the growing Chicago, conditions were no better, the two continued their travels. In Spain the "scheme had become convincing and tangible." This was the genesis of Hull House. The two returned to Toynbee Hall for six months of study. Then they came back to America, and the great adventure.

Hull House Opened in '89.

Hull House was opened on September 14, 1889 at Halstead and Polk streets, in the very heart of Chicago's squalid West Side. An old mansion, it had long stood there, once the farmhouse of Charles Hull, wealthy landowner. The great Chicago fire of 1871 had crept close to its red brick walls, had swept the nearby pastures. "But God's hand must have saved the house for us," Miss Addams later remarked. It now covers six blocks.

Word was not long in spreading among Chicago's immigrants, huddled on the "West Side" of the now teeming Midwestern metropolis, that Hull House had started, that immigrants of any race, color or creed were welcome there. Immigrants of two score nations knew of it, but hesitated to believe in it. Only three years before, the Haymarket bombings and riot had thrown Chicago into turmoil, built up a native hatred for immigrants, and made one immigrant suspect.

But they came, timidly, at first and then with more assurance. At first there were only little groups, then races began to mingle about the old mansion's hearth, and out of these gatherings came friendship, peace and restoration of Old World customs in the heart of a new world.

Not only were immigrants welcomed, but also attracted were Gerard Swope, William Chenery, Mackenzie King, Thomas Masyrick, men who were to loom large in industry, journalism, politics. Robert Morss Lovett, Bostonian out of Harvard, came there with Mrs. Lovette, and he is still fighting for freedom in Chicago. Julia Lathrop, first head of the Children's Bureau; Grace Abbott, a later chief, were some who were "educated" there. Ramsay MacDonald and his bride visited Hull House on their honeymoon. His son, years later, came there, too.

But in the war days, when hatreds spread across the land, even before the first American went to France, Hull House was a target. One of the heaviest subscribers to this great social venture withdrew his support because of Miss Addams' views on peace. But the trustees stuck by her.

In 1912 she had her first venture in national politics when she came out for Theodore Roosevelt for President on the Bull Moose ticket. She, the advocate of peace, was a great admirer of Teddy, who fought in the Spanish-American War and urged the United States into that same conflict from which, in 1915, Miss Addams tried to free the western world.

Foe of Militarists.

Miss Addams' highest hope, of course, was a world without arms. "The world is not yet ready," she said, "but some day it will be." She worked for that day, even through the war itself, when pacifists were hated people. "The militarists," she once said, "in the guise of patriotism have falsely portrayed pacifism as fanaticism. They profess Christianity; yet their armies slay and butcher. It is they who are fanatics, fanatical about power and greed and killing."

She was forceful, yet unassuming and shy about her efforts for peace. America was surprised when she was found not to be aboard Henry Ford's famous peace ship. She was ill at home. She said she would not have gone anyway, for she was distrustful "of the publicity involved in such a venture."

But her advocacy for peace reached its zenith in 1915 when she called the international congress of women at the Hague. An ending of the world war was its aim. Miss Addams presided, but the congress failed. Yet out of it grew the powerful Woman's International League For Peace and Freedom. She became the first president and carried on the work.

Underwood & Underwood.

Miss Addams, as she looked in 1931, when the Nobel Peace Prize had been awarded jointly to her and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

In 1923, on a world-wide trip, she was taken ill of tumor of the breast in Tokyo and was operated upon. After 1929 she was seldom in good health, and when the Good Will congress met in Chicago in 1931 she was too ill to attend. In December she underwent another tumor operation at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore. In that same year, with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, she shared the Nobel Peace Prize.

Just a few weeks ago she came to Washington and was honored at the largest dinner in the history of the Willard Hotel, when thousands gathered to hear her speak. She participated in an international peace broadcast on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the International Congress of Women at the Hague. Interviewed for The Post at that time she said, "Only by insistent expression of public opinion can peace and disarmament be secured."

Miss Addams never married. Once she confessed that "there had been several gentlemen," however. Had she lived, she would have been 75 next September 6.

Jewish Fund Drive Hits $21,000 Mark

The United Jewish Appeal Fund has reached the $21,000 mark, it was announced yesterday. The goal is $35,000, and since the drive has another week to go, those in charge believe it will be attained if the present pace is continued.

Edmund I. Kaufmann, co-chairman of the drive, told the workers other cities are watching the Washington campaign with interest. Dr. Samuel Friling, a refugee from Germany, described the plight of thousands of destitute Jews in Europe. Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, a leader of the women's division, and Isidore Hershfield, co-chairman of the drive, said that the success of the drive would depend on reaching many small contributors.

McGill Appeals To Wheat Belt For AAA Vote

'Remember 2 Years Ago,' Senator Urges in Radio Address.

By the Associated Press.

Wheat farmers who vote Saturday on whether to continue production control under the AAA, last night were urged by Senator McGill (Democrat), Kansas, to "remember now your condition two years ago."

"You are no longer helpless with reference to your own situation," he said in a radio talk, "because you have the assurance that the wheat farmers throughout America will cooperate with you. Without the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program our basic industry, agriculture, would have continued in a state of ruin."

Praises "Minute Men."

McGill spoke at the close of day in which half a hundred farm leaders met in a closed session to plan support of the AAA and Secretary Wallace's "clarifying" licensing amendments to the law. Those meeting refused to discuss the proceedings, but in a formal statement the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation said:

"These leaders constitute the minute men of agriculture, every one of whom represents home groups which in the aggregate include hundreds of thousands of farmers producing dairy, grain, live stock, wool, corn, cotton, fruit, vegetables and other products of the soil.

"They admit they are here to formulate agriculture's support of the AAA amendments and the agricultural adjustment act as so amended. * * * Their purpose is to present a united front."

Ten Millions for Cotton.

At the Capitol, meanwhile, the House Rules Committee decided to call on Wallace to explain more fully the nature of the amendments which already have been approved by the Agriculture Committee. This decision was expected to delay floor consideration of the amending bill until next week. How much debate shall be allowed was one of the problems confronting the rules group.

A total of 319,999 checks for $10,925,495 in rental payment to farmers taking part in the 1935 cotton production program have been prepared for mailing by the AAA, it was announced yesterday. A year ago at this time, only 117,109 checks for $4,739,857 had been prepared.

Silver Coin Ban Hits Ten Nations

Canadian Money Is Not Affected by Ruling.

By the Associated Press.

Treasury statistics disclosed yesterday that silver coins of at least ten countries would be forbidden entry into the United States under the new import ban.

The silver content of the coins of the following countries was described as more valuable as bullion than as money: Bolivia, Chile, China, Costa Rico, Colombia, Hong Kong, Mexico, Peru, Salvadore, and Uruguay.

This list was based on latest information available to the department.

Treasury officials said that Canadian money was not affected.

Youth Admits Slaying 15-Year-Old Maine Girl

Belfast, Maine, May 21 (AP).—Attorney General Clyde R. Chapman tonight said Frederick Reynolds, 19, had confessed he had assaulted and killed 15-year-old Eileen Folsom, whose body was found 2 miles from her home today. Chapman said Reynolds confessed after officers had become suspicious of him because of a chance remark he made.

The girl, a freshman in high school, was missed by her mother and father last night when she failed to return from school. Today the mother reported her absence to the school superintendent.

Police found her body under a tree. Her head was crushed.

Circus Elephant Snaps Chains, Fatally Gores Trainer in West

Man Is Second Killed in Ten Days at Animals' Winter Quarters.

Los Angeles, May 21.—The sudden reversion of caged animals to the killing instincts of their jungle forbears claimed the life today of the second trainer here in ten days.

"Prince," bull elephant leader of the herd at Al G. Barnes Circus winter quarters at Baldwin Park, fatally gored Joe Reed, veteran animal trainer, as Reed was putting eight elephants and 12 tigers through their paces for a jungle film. Reed died in a hospital.

On May 12, Harman Ziegler, likewise an experienced animal trainer, died of wounds inflicted when 15 lions went wild at a lion farm at El Monte.

In both cases the animals reverted in a flash to their primitive instincts.

Reed met death when the elephant herd stampeded. Snapping its heavy chains as if they were paper, Prince attacked Reed, goring him three times, while the other elephants charged wildly about.

Reed's tigers took no part in the killing, running instead to their cage, screaming and snarling.

Ziegler died in the same sort of a burst of animal hatred. His lions were docilely learning to mount a stool when one turned on him as he stumbled. Before anyone could interfere, the entire 15 pounced on him.

An inquest into Reed's death will be heard Thursday.

End of Impasse Looms on Ban Of Holding Unit

House Democrats Confer Secretly With Roosevelt to Break Deadlock.

By the Associated Press.

A break in the House Interstate Commerce sub-committee deadlock over abolition of public utility holding companies was hinted yesterday after a secret White House conference attended by Democratic members of the sub-committee Monday night.

One member, who would not be quoted because of the iron-bound secrecy rule thrown around the sub-committee work on the controversial Administration legislation, privately expressed the opinion a measure satisfactory to the President and Congress would be worked out.

No one would say, however, whether that meant President Roosevelt had modified his stand for abolition of "unnecessary" holding units.

The sub-committee has been laboring for weeks in an effort to devise some way of drafting legislation to meet the President's wishes and still satisfy members on the closely divided committee who insist the "death sentence" not be imposed on the holding companies.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee has approved a draft of the measure calling for abolition, but allowing a maximum of two years more grace beyond the 1940 deadline set in the original Wheeler-Rayburn bill.

It was understood the much-objected-to provision to require a company to make its line common carrier for another company's power if the Government demanded, would not be in the new draft. Likewise, the sub-committee was understood to have decided against attempting to regulate electric transmission of power produced incidental to manufacturing operations.

It was undecided whether to retain the natural gas or pipe line control provisions, which are not in the Senate bill.

Labor Bill Vote Waits Sanction Of Roosevelt

Byrns and O'Connor Hope for Speedy Approval of Disputes Measure.

By the Associated Press.

One obstacle, the need of a presidential indorsement, was all that stood tonight in the path of a speedy House vote on the Wagner labor disputes bill, already passed by the Senate.

With an eye to getting the indorsement, Speaker Byrns and Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the House Rules Committee plan to discuss the measure with Mr. Roosevelt, but have not been given a definite place yet on the White House calling list.

Chairman Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the Labor Committee left the White House Monday, however, saying he was convinced the President strongly favors the bill.

His committee unanimously reported the measure favorably yesterday after writing in an amendment that would put a proposed permanent National Labor Relations Board in the Labor Department instead of designating it an independent government agency. Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, author of the bill, has argued for the latter and Secretary Perkins for the former.

Connery said he would introduce today a resolution asking for a rule under which the measure would be brought before the House for consideration. He said he anticipated little difficulty in getting the rule.

The bill would put in permanent law the right of labor to bargain collectively with employers, ban company domination of unions, and specifically designate five "unfair labor practices," such as coercion of employes in their efforts to organize.

Connery said that as amended the bill would make decisions of the Labor Board reviewable only by the courts and would not permit the Labor Secretary to appoint its personnel.

Although it previously had approved an almost identical measure by its chairman, the House Labor Committee decided to report out the Wagner bill in order to steer the legislation around parliamentary jams.

Stapp drove the fastest trial of the day, averaging 116.736 miles an hour for the 25 miles. Litz speeded over the distance at 114.488 miles an hour, while Connor's average was 114.321.

The ill luck which has followed Kelly Petillo, Los Angeles pilot, since he has been preparing for the 1935 race, worked against him again today when his motor virtually went to pieces just as he was completing the ninth lap of his qualifying trial. He had averaged approximately 117 miles an hour, with top speed on the sixth lap, when he careened about the bricks at 118.483 miles an hour.

Between You and Me

$27,000 Down the Sink; Wage Scales in Real Danger; Cotton Ed Joins Up With AAA.

By Raymond Clapper

CONSIDERABLE outcry is on the way over the Administration's schedule of work relief wages. In part it will be sincere and in part it will be a shedding of crocodile tears over labor for political reasons.

Between the two, the Administration is in for a rough ride.

The fight had its origin in the testimony of Admiral Peoples during hearings on the works relief bill in the House. He said the plan was to give relief workers a "security wage," which, he estimated, would average about $50 per month. Labor screamed in horror. Such a relief wage would break down private wage scales through the country and grind labor down to a starvation wage.

Senator McCarran, a Nevada Democrat with a piping voice and a bull neck, lunged at the scheme. He offered the now famous "McCarran amendment" to the works bill, which would have required the Government to pay relief wages approximating the prevailing wage in private industry in given communities. It passed, but the Administration was able to break it down after prolonged committee reconsideration and a promise that it would try to avoid demoralization of private wages. Republicans who had not given a sympathetic thought to labor in years joined up with labor and made political hay.

That commotion was all on the tip that the Administration was planning a wage relief scale averaging $50 a month.

* * * *

Now the Administration has announced the scale of pay for the 3,500,000 men it expects to put to work. That scale ranges from $19 to $94 a month. It doesn't average anywhere near $50 a month because the great numbers of employes will be in the lower brackets. The top figures are reserved for professional and technical persons. Of the 20 classifications in unskilled labor, all except 2 rate $50 per month or less. Of the 20 groups in the intermediate class, 14 rate $50 per month or less. Six of the 20 groups in the skilled workers classfication will receive $50 or less.

* * * *

One Republican who fought for the McCarran amendment predicts that these wage rates will make work relief highly unpopular. Whereas a week ago Republicans were worried over the political advantage in the $4,000,000,000 relief chest, they now can visualize the cry "$19 a month for security."

They say it won't be popular with those who have drawn as much or more on relief without working. Well, the Administration doesn't worry about that. Its purpose is to drive relief workers back to private employment. The real trouble will come over the danger to established wage scales in private employment, plus the fact that firms which supply materials will gather in their usual profits.

Compared with other things that have happened it was only a minor matter, but still the Internal Revenue Bureau hasn't been anxious to advertise the fact that 3,000,000 cotton tags, issued under the Bankhead act, had to be thrown away. They weighed 24 tons. These little metal tags, about the size of a quarter, were part of a stock of 22,000,000 laid in by the tax collectors.

Each bale of cotton had to have one before it could be passed. Because of uncertainty as to the amount of cotton in various warehouse centers, extra supplies were distributed. The surplus tags later were carefully counted and, after a certified report was made, were dumped in the river. Eight tons are said to have gone into the Potomac, the remainder being destroyed elsewhere. Being metal, they sank, but not without trace. Net loss, $27,000—a mere trifle.

The fight of Senate Progressives against Senator Chavez, of New Mexico, had repercussions as far away as Denver, where a mayoralty election was held yesterday.

One of the candidates was supported by the Costigan organization. Senator Costigan, of Colorado had fought the Chavez contest against the late Senator Cutting. So the night before the Denver election, a few hours after Senator Chavez was seated and when it was too late for anyone to challenge him or wage reprisal, his brother went up from New Mexico to Denver and made a political speech against the pro-Costigan candidate for mayor.

* * * *

Behind the speech of Senator Tydings, Maryland's Democratic bachelor, proposing an international conference at Washington to consider war debts, disarmament, stabilization and tariff barriers, is the shadow of a man who, almost unknown to the general public, has made international history. He is Salmon O. Levinson, Chicago lawyer. It was he who, moving between Washington and European capitals, midwifed the idea of the Kellogg peace pact and saw it finally signed by all leading nations of the world.

The fact that this pact has become a scrap of paper has not discouraged Levinson. He came here several weeks ago and began talking among Senators about his plan for settling the war debts. Senator Tydings once made the mistake of writing a book on the subject and Levinson sought him out. Tydings has his own ideas but he has been converted to some of Levinson's too and was enthusiastic enough to make a Senate speech.

There is no flicker of Administration interest in the plan but neither was there any when Levinson first came to Washington with his outlawry of war idea which culminated in the Kellogg pact. Senator Borah was one of his champions then. He's against this one.

* * * *

Department of Agriculture officials claim to have won Senator Ellison Smith, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, over to the AAA amendments. He has kept these amendments stymied through two sessions. With Cotton Ed on the bandwagon, AAA officials now predict action.

* * * *

Business men who are mobilizing here today to demand extension of NRA have turned to organized labor for their publicity counsel. They engaged as chief of the publicity staff for today's meeting, Chester M. Wright, closely indentified with labor publicity for years and public relations counselor for the textile workers in their strike last summer.

The engineer who was responsible for the plan to harness the tides at Passamaquoddy has been elbowed out of a chance to participate in the realization of his dream. He is Dexter Cooper, a brother of Hugh Cooper, who built Muscle Shoals. Dexter has a summer home at Campobello Island, near President Roosevelt's summer place, and close to Passamaquoddy Bay. He built a miniature tide-harnessing electric power plant on his estate to prove the big Quoddy project is practicable.

Cooper made countless trips to Washington in behalf of the plan, organized a company, sought to borrow PWA money, but, failing to convince Washington that the tide-harnessing plant could be made to pay for itself, he was turned down.

But under the works relief program, the Government is going to build the plant itself. Cooper, who knows more about the scheme than any other man, may squeeze into the picture as a consultant. But the real building job was turned over to the War Department. Army engineers are already at work. Secretary of War Dern is flying to Maine right away to turn the first spadeful of earth. Engineer Cooper sees his dream-child fading out of his grasp.

you please," said the stocky World War veteran.

"I'll figure it out outside if you want," the Kentuckian flashed back, taking off his glasses, but Maverick only replied sarcastically: "I'm afraid of you."

A few moments later Maverick nearly started another fistic encounter when he interjected that Cassidy ought to be thrown out of the committee room.

But as the session broke up for noon recess, the three left separately and amicably, with May telling reporters he had instructed the official reporter to expunge the tilt with Maverick from the record if the latter approved.

Charges "Immense" Lobby.

Maverick, however, promptly got out a formal statement charging:

"An immense crooked lobby is trying to defeat the TVA. It is rotten and disgraceful."

May was using the material from McCarl's audit, which criticized many TVA expenditures as unsanctioned by law, as ammunition for his fight against legislation to expand TVA operations by giving the organization specific authority to sell surplus power.

The audit was attacked by Arthur F. Morgan, TVA chairman, as showing a lack of complete investigation of facts and making unjust comparisons.

Summoned to discuss it, McCarl refused to get mixed up in the committee fight but hit at "haphazard" laws. He said he would propose an amendment to the TVA act to require the agency to operate under a competitive bidding system.

Lyddane Probe Ended, Verdict Coming Today

Grand Jury Indictment Asked on 2 Charges of Plots to Kill.

The report of the grand jury which investigated the murder-conspiracy charges against Mrs. Anne Lyddane will be delivered at 9:30 a. m. today in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

At that time, before Judge Charles H. Woodward, the jury will announce whether it has indicted Mrs. Lyddane or decided to ignore the charge that she conspired with others to kill her husband, Francis Lyddane.

State's Attorney James H. Pugh, who yesterday completed the presentation of testimony to the investigating body, is seeking the indictment of Mrs. Lyddane on two counts; first, that she conspired to kill her husband, and, second, that she conspired to kill Mrs. Josephine Beall, of Darnestown.

Bealls Chief Witnesses.

Mrs. Beall and her husband, Arthur Beall, a garage man, were the principal witnesses to appear before the grand jury yesterday. Both refused to discuss their testimony when they were excused from the grand jury room.

The Bealls left the courthouse together. Mrs. Beall named Mrs. Lyddane as corespondent in a divorce action she filed against her husband two years ago. The suit was withdrawn and the couple was reconciled.

State's Attorney Pugh is seeking an indictment on the grounds that Mrs. Lyddane conspired to kill Mrs. Beall, despite the fact that this charge was ignored at a preliminary hearing several weeks ago.

Typewriter Is "Witness."

A silent "witness" for the grand jury was a typewriter on which Mrs. Lyddane is alleged to have written two notes found in the possession of one of the men charged with being involved in the plot. This typewriter came from the Rockville Bank where Mrs. Lyddane was employed.

Other witnesses who appeared before the jury yesterday were James McDonough, a house painter who is a neighbor of the Bealls at Darnestown, and George C. Esworthy, understood to be from Darnestown. The nature of their testimony could not be learned.

In addition to seeking the indictment of Mrs. Lyddane, the State also is trying to indict Edwin H. Davis and John M. Borland, both of whom are held at Rockville Jail.

In all, 29 witnesses were heard in the two-day probe. On order from Judge Woodward, news photographers and reporters were banned from the floor of the grand jury room. This was an unusual procedure.

Senate D. C. Committee Will Meet Tomorrow

The Senate District Committee will meet at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to dispose of several pending bills, among them the divorce and public utility appeal measures.

Action on the reappointment of Richmond B. Keech as a member of the Public Utilities Commission may await another meeting, it was said, as his present term does not expire until July. No opposition to confirmation of the appointment has arisen, however.

10 Per Cent Offered To Settle War Debt

Proposal in Parliament Would End Matter.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 21.—A specific figure for settlement "once and for all" of the war debts to the United States was named for the first time today in the House of Commons when a 10 per cent figure was proposed.

Col. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, pioneer aviator and former parliamentary secretary of transport, urged the 10 per cent settlement to end "a growing sore on the other side of the Atlantic."

"It is natural for an American citizens to ask why it is not and can not be paid," he asserted.

"We know perfectly well we never received any money," he said, but pointed out that "we went guarantee" on goods supplied to the allies.

"Let us make a gesture and offer £100,000,000 (about $500,000,000) in gold and in return get a cancellation of all debts of all the allies throughout the world," he pleaded.

First Lady Credited As Rival Attraction

By the Associated Press.

Boston, May 21.—Mrs Franklin D. Roosevelt was recognized today by the Massachusetts League of Women Voters as a serious rival attraction.

In a report to the fifteenth annual convention of the league, Mrs. Trueworthy White, chairman of publicity, thus accounted for poor attendance at last year's convention:

"The real reason was the impolite collision with the First Lady of the land. She came off with the best of it as far as audiences were concerned."

Mrs. Roosevelt came to Boston last October unexpectedly to attend a Girl Scout gathering.

Illinois House Holds Up Relief Before July 1

Emergency Vote Fails Fifth Time to Make Funds Available Now.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., May 21.—Hopes of Illinois' 1,200,000 jobless for early resumption of relief were dashed late today and they faced the prospect of receiving no Federal or State aid again until July 1.

The first blow came with failure of the House of Representatives to adopt a bill increasing the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent by an emergency majority of 102. Passage would have provided relief funds immediately. A caucus of the Democratic majority then decided to enact the legislation by a majority of 77, which would make it effective July 1.

No provision was made for food for the needy in the meantime. Harry Hopkins, FERA administrator, has repeatedly warned he would send no more Federal grants to the State until it advances $3,000,000 a month as its share of the relief costs. But Senator James Hamilton Lewis, Illinois Democrat, who has been in touch with Hopkins' office, has expressed the opinion Government money would be sent to Illinois when the tax bill is passed, regardless of its effective date.

Wilfred Reynolds, executive secretary of the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission, stated at Chicago:

"The I. E. R. C. is at the absolute end of its rope."

The commission estimated 125,000 families in Cook County (Chicago) and 100,000 down-State had exhausted the last of cash food orders supplied by the commission. The Illinois Workers Alliance claimed 3,000 persons had joined in a hunger march in Springfield today.

Administration leaders, unable to muster the 102 votes in five roll calls in the three weeks the State has been denied Government allotments, planned to adopt the revised measure tomorrow. They gained four votes today when the unofficial count stood at 94 to 54 in their favor when balloting was suspended.

The legislative session was one of the most dramatic in recent years. The chamber rang with bitter recrimination. A demonstrative but orderly procession of jobless from many sections of the State shouted demands for renewal of aid as they were escorted to an outlying park by police. Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago and Patrick Nash, Democratic national committeeman from Illinois, who threw the force of their influence behind the rejected legislation, looked on from a crowded gallery.

New York, May 21.—The garments worn by his 17-year-old bride when she fell mortally wounded before a fusillade of bullets were introduced in evidence today at the murder trial of Joseph Steinmetz, 22-year-old divinity student.

Steinmetz, who is charged with slaying both his wife and the Rev. Joseph Leonard when he found them together in a hotel room last November 26, used both hands to shield his eyes from the sight.

Testimony tending to support the defense contention that Steinmetz was under great emotional strain at the time was adduced from Detective William R. Holzherr, who testified on cross-examination that the youth was too nervous to appear in the police lineup next morning.

Detective John P. Gilman told of finding two cartridges and a wedding ring in Steinmetz's vest pocket. The prosecution is attempting to establish that the young woman had returned the ring to her husband and was planning to return home.

Memorial services were held in the House yesterday for six Congressmen who have died in the last year. The dead who were honored included:

Speaker Henry T. Rainey of Illinois; Senator Bronson Cutting of New Mexico, and Representatives Thomas C. Cowin of Idaho, Frederick Landis of Indiana, Anthony J. Griffin of New York, and George F. Brumm of Pennsylvania.

The memorial addresses were delivered by Representative Woodrum of Virginia, for the Democrats, and Representative Gifford of Massachusetts for the Republicans.

Nepotism Abolishment Is Urged by Mitchell

Arguments in favor of abolishing nepotism from Capitol Hill were presented before the House Committee on Accounts yesterday by Representative J. R. Mitchell (Democrat), of Tennessee.

"They gave me an attentive hearing," he declared, "but I must say they didn't appear unduly enthusiastic."

Action was deferred when Mitchell proposed to amend his bill, or present a companion measure, which would prevent the hiring of relatives in Government bureaus as well as by members of Congress.

stupidities that Hull House and the International League for Peace and Freedom, her two great monuments, grew.

Her ambition was to complete "the mobilization of the human spirit" by bettering, if not fundamentally changing, the life of the world. Her desire for reform swept aside all barriers of race or religion as she spread her plea for decency and tolerance throughout the world. Everywhere her name was known and honored as a great social worker, as a defender of the rights of the downtrodden, and as one who would remove the scourge of arms from all nations.

Born in Illinois.

She was born, nearly 75 years ago, in a small Illinois town called Cedarville. When she died she had arisen from the obscurity of that hamlet to a position of honor conferred upon her by impoverished tenement dwellers of Chicago and by those who sit in the seats of the mighty, directing the affairs of nations.

Her father was a mill-owner, and there in Cedarville she lived in a large house. When driving with her father she passed the squalid houses, tenements, and shacks which surrounded the source of his income. Often she would see even more degrading sights as they entered the city of Chicago. It was early in her life that she decided that her work was to be toward elimination of the defects in a system which allowed human beings to live amid such squalor and filth.

Her Father Knew Lincoln.

Her parents were Quakers, and while she was affiliated with no one church she was a deeply religious woman. Her mother, Sarah, died soon after she was born; but her father, John Addams, lavished as much love and attention as he could upon his daughter. A miller, a banker, an assemblyman and friend of Abraham Lincoln, he exerted great influence upon the frail and lonely girl.

Early in her childhood, Jane Addams was afflicted with curvature of the spine, and this deformity, she once said, made her shrink from appearing in public with her father, lest he be chagrined by having it known that this "ugly duckling" was his. She was brought up at home until she was 17, when she entered the Rockford Female Seminary. In 1881 she was one of four girls graduated on the day the seminary became Rockford College.

"I knew that when I grew up," she later said, "I would have a large home." She was thinking of the ramshackles near her father's mill, of the grisly streets of Chicago. "But it would not be among other large homes," she added, "it would be right in the midst of these dirty homes." Hull House stands thus.

Reform Zeal Came Early.

The dream of reform was early born in her. But ill-health drove her abroad and she first thought that she could best serve mankind through medicine, which she studied both abroad and in this country. For six months she lay strapped to a bed following an operation upon her spine. And then, in London, she visited Toynbee Hall.

This, the first of the world's great social settlements, crystallized her convictions. She saw in Chicago the place for her own large home. One day in April, 1888, she disclosed her plans and her hopes to her close friend and schoolmate, Ellen Star Gates. Her mind crowded with the unsavory sights of London streets and fully cognizant that, in the growing Chicago, conditions were no better, the two continued their travels. In Spain the "scheme had become convincing and tangible." This was the genesis of Hull House. The two returned to Toynbee Hall for six months of study. Then they came back to America, and the great adventure.

Hull House Opened in '89.

Hull House was opened on September 14, 1889 at Halstead and Polk streets, in the very heart of Chicago's squalid West Side. An old mansion, it had long stood there, once the farmhouse of Charles Hull, wealthy landowner. The great Chicago fire of 1871 had crept close to its red brick walls, had swept the nearby pastures. "But God's hand must have saved the house for us," Miss Addams later remarked. It now covers six blocks.

Word was not long in spreading among Chicago's immigrants, huddled on the "West Side" of the now teeming Midwestern metropolis, that Hull House had started, that immigrants of any race, color or creed were welcome there. Immigrants of two score nations knew of it, but hesitated to believe in it. Only three years before, the Haymarket bombings and riot had thrown Chicago into turmoil, built up a native hatred for immigrants, and made one immigrant suspect.

But they came, timidly, at first and then with more assurance. At first there were only little groups, then races began to mingle about the old mansion's hearth, and out of these gatherings came friendship, peace and restoration of Old World customs in the heart of a new world.

Not only were immigrants welcomed, but also attracted were Gerard Swope, William Chenery, Mackenzie King, Thomas Masyrick, men who were to loom large in industry, journalism, politics. Robert Morss Lovett, Bostonian out of of Harvard, came there with Mrs. Lovette, and he is still fighting for freedom in Chicago. Julia Lathrop, first head of the Children's Bureau; Grace Abbott, a later chief, were some who were "educated" there. Ramsay MacDonald and his bride visited Hull House on their honeymoon. His son, years later, came there, too.

But in the war days, when hatreds spread across the land, even before the first American went to France, Hull House was a target. One of the heaviest subscribers to this great social venture withdrew his support because of Miss Addams' views on peace. But the trustees stuck by her.

In 1912 she had her first venture in national politics when she came out for Theodore Roosevelt for President on the Bull Moose ticket. She, the advocate of peace, was a great admirer of Teddy, who fought in the Spanish-American War and urged the United States into that same conflict from which, in 1915, Miss Addams tried to free the western world.

Foe of Militarists.

Miss Addams' highest hope, of course, was a world without arms. "The world is not yet ready," she said, "but some day it will be." She worked for that day, even through the war itself, when pacifists were hated people. "The militarists," she once said, "in the guise of patriotism have falsely portrayed pacifism as fanaticism. They profess Christianity; yet their armies slay and butcher. It is they who are fanatics, fanatical about power and greed and killing."

She was forceful, yet unassuming and shy about her efforts for peace. America was surprised when she was found not to be aboard Henry Ford's famous peace ship. She was ill at home. She said she would not have gone anyway, for she was distrustful "of the publicity involved in such a venture."

But her advocacy for peace reached its zenith in 1915 when she called the international congress of women at the Hague. An ending of the world war was its aim. Miss Addams presided, but the congress failed. Yet out of it grew the powerful Woman's International League For Peace and Freedom. She became the first president and carried on the work.

Underwood & Underwood.

Miss Addams, as she looked in 1931, when the Nobel Peace Prize had been awarded jointly to her and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

In 1923, on a world-wide trip, she was taken ill of tumor of the breast in Tokyo and was operated upon. After 1929 she was seldom in good health, and when the Good Will congress met in Chicago in 1931 she was too ill to attend. In December she underwent another tumor operation at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore. In that same year, with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, she shared the Nobel Peace Prize.

Just a few weeks ago she came to Washington and was honored at the largest dinner in the history of the Willard Hotel, when thousands gathered to hear her speak. She participated in an international peace broadcast on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the International Congress of Women at the Hague. Interviewed for The Post at that time she said, "Only by insistent expression of public opinion can peace and disarmament be secured."

Miss Addams never married. Once she confessed that "there had been several gentlemen," however. Had she lived, she would have been 75 next September 6.

Jewish Fund Drive Hits $21,000 Mark

The United Jewish Appeal Fund has reached the $21,000 mark, it was announced yesterday. The goal is $35,000, and since the drive has another week to go, those in charge believe it will be attained if the present pace is continued.

Edmund I. Kaufmann, co-chairman of the drive, told the workers other cities are watching the Washington campaign with interest. Dr. Samuel Friling, a refugee from Germany, described the plight of thousands of destitute Jews in Europe. Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, a leader of the women's division, and Isidore Hershfield, co-chairman of the drive, said that the success of the drive would depend on reaching many small contributors.

McGill Appeals To Wheat Belt For AAA Vote

'Remember 2 Years Ago,' Senator Urges in Radio Address.

By the Associated Press.

Wheat farmers who vote Saturday on whether to continue production control under the AAA, last night were urged by Senator McGill (Democrat), Kansas, to "remember now your condition two years ago."

"You are no longer helpless with reference to your own situation," he said in a radio talk, "because you have the assurance that the wheat farmers throughout America will cooperate with you. Without the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program our basic industry, agriculture, would have continued in a state of ruin."

Praises "Minute Men."

McGill spoke at the close of day in which half a hundred farm leaders met in a closed session to plan support of the AAA and Secretary Wallace's "clarifying" licensing amendments to the law. Those meeting refused to discuss the proceedings, but in a formal statement the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation said:

"These leaders constitute the minute men of agriculture, every one of whom represents home groups which in the aggregate include hundreds of thousands of farmers producing dairy, grain, live stock, wool, corn, cotton, fruit, vegetables and other products of the soil.

"They admit they are here to formulate agriculture's support of the AAA amendments and the agricultural adjustment act as so amended. * * * Their purpose is to present a united front."

Ten Millions for Cotton.

At the Capitol, meanwhile, the House Rules Committee decided to call on Wallace to explain more fully the nature of the amendments which already have been approved by the Agriculture Committee. This decision was expected to delay floor consideration of the amending bill until next week. How much debate shall be allowed was one of the problems confronting the rules group.

A total of 319,999 checks for $10,925,495 in rental payment to farmers taking part in the 1935 cotton production program have been prepared for mailing by the AAA, it was announced yesterday. A year ago at this time, only 117,109 checks for $4,739,857 had been prepared.

Silver Coin Ban Hits Ten Nations

Canadian Money Is Not Affected by Ruling.

By the Associated Press.

Treasury statistics disclosed yesterday that silver coins of at least ten countries would be forbidden entry into the United States under the new import ban.

The silver content of the coins of the following countries was described as more valuable as bullion than as money: Bolivia, Chile, China, Costa Rico, Colombia, Hong Kong, Mexico, Peru, Salvadore, and Uruguay.

This list was based on latest information available to the department.

Treasury officials said that Canadian money was not affected.

Youth Admits Slaying 15-Year-Old Maine Girl

Belfast, Maine, May 21 (AP).—Attorney General Clyde R. Chapman tonight said Frederick Reynolds, 19, had confessed he had assaulted and killed 15-year-old Eileen Folsom, whose body was found 2 miles from her home today. Chapman said Reynolds confessed after officers had become suspicious of him because of a chance remark he made.

The girl, a freshman in high school, was missed by her mother and father last night when she failed to return from school. Today the mother reported her absence to the school superintendent.

Police found her body under a tree. Her head was crushed.

Circus Elephant Snaps Chains, Fatally Gores Trainer in West

Man Is Second Killed in Ten Days at Animals' Winter Quarters.

Los Angeles, May 21.—The sudden reversion of caged animals to the killing instincts of their jungle forbears claimed the life today of the second trainer here in ten days.

"Prince," bull elephant leader of the herd at Al G. Barnes Circus winter quarters at Baldwin Park, fatally gored Joe Reed, veteran animal trainer, as Reed was putting eight elephants and 12 tigers through their paces for a jungle film. Reed died in a hospital.

On May 12, Harman Ziegler, likewise an experienced animal trainer, died of wounds inflicted when 15 lions went wild at a lion farm at El Monte.

In both cases the animals reverted in a flash to their primitive instincts.

Reed met death when the elephant herd stampeded. Snapping its heavy chains as if they were paper, Prince attacked Reed, goring him three times, while the other elephants charged wildly about.

Reed's tigers took no part in the killing, running instead to their cage, screaming and snarling.

Ziegler died in the same sort of a burst of animal hatred. His lions were docilely learning to mount a stool when one turned on him as he stumbled. Before anyone could interfere, the entire 15 pounced on him.

An inquest into Reed's death will be heard Thursday.

End of Impasse Looms on Ban Of Holding Unit

House Democrats Confer Secretly With Roosevelt to Break Deadlock.

By the Associated Press.

A break in the House Interstate Commerce sub-committee deadlock over abolition of public utility holding companies was hinted yesterday after a secret White House conference attended by Democratic members of the sub-committee Monday night.

One member, who would not be quoted because of the iron-bound secrecy rule thrown around the sub-committee work on the controversial Administration legislation, privately expressed the opinion a measure satisfactory to the President and Congress would be worked out.

No one would say, however, whether that meant President Roosevelt had modified his stand for abolition of "unnecessary" holding units.

The sub-committee has been laboring for weeks in an effort to devise some way of drafting legislation to meet the President's wishes and still satisfy members on the closely divided committee who insist the "death sentence" not be imposed on the holding companies.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee has approved a draft of the measure calling for abolition, but allowing a maximum of two years more grace beyond the 1940 deadline set in the original Wheeler-Rayburn bill.

It was understood the much-objected-to provision to require a company to make its line common carrier for another company's power if the Government demanded, would not be in the new draft. Likewise, the sub-committee was understood to have decided against attempting to regulate electric transmission of power produced incidental to manufacturing operations.

It was undecided whether to retain the natural gas or pipe line control provisions, which are not in the Senate bill.

Illinois House Holds Up Relief Before July 1

Emergency Vote Fails Fifth Time to Make Funds Available Now.

Springfield, Ill., May 21.—Hopes of Illinois' 1,200,000 jobless for early resumption of relief were dashed late today and they faced the prospect of receiving no Federal or State aid again until July 1.

Foe of Militarists.

Miss Addams' highest hope, of course, was a world without arms. "The world is not yet ready," she said, "but some day it will be." She worked for that day, even through the war itself, when pacifists were hated people. "The militarists," she once said, "in the guise of patriotism have falsely portrayed pacifism as fanaticism. They profess Christianity; yet their armies slay and butcher. It is they who are fanatics, fanatical about power and greed and killing."

She was forceful, yet unassuming and shy about her efforts for peace. America was surprised when she was found not to be aboard Henry Ford's famous peace ship. She was ill at home. She said she would not have gone anyway, for she was distrustful "of the publicity involved in such a venture."

But her advocacy for peace reached its zenith in 1915 when she called the international congress of women at the Hague. An ending of the world war was its aim. Miss Addams presided, but the congress failed. Yet out of it grew the powerful Woman's International League For Peace and Freedom. She became the first president and carried on the work.

Miss Addams, as she looked in 1931, when the Nobel Peace Prize had been awarded jointly to her and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

In 1923, on a world-wide trip, she was taken ill of tumor of the breast in Tokyo and was operated upon. After 1929 she was seldom in good health, and when the Good Will congress met in Chicago in 1931 she was too ill to attend. In December she underwent another tumor operation at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore. In that same year, with Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, she shared the Nobel Peace Prize.

Just a few weeks ago she came to Washington and was honored at the largest dinner in the history of the Willard Hotel, when thousands gathered to hear her speak. She participated in an international peace broadcast on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of the International Congress of Women at the Hague. Interviewed for The Post at that time she said, "Only by insistent expression of public opinion can peace and disarmament be secured."

Miss Addams never married. Once she confessed that "there had been several gentlemen," however. Had she lived, she would have been 75 next September 6.

Jewish Fund Drive Hits $21,000 Mark

The United Jewish Appeal Fund has reached the $21,000 mark, it was announced yesterday. The goal is $35,000, and since the drive has another week to go, those in charge believe it will be attained if the present pace is continued.

Edmund I. Kaufmann, co-chairman of the drive, told the workers other cities are watching the Washington campaign with interest. Dr. Samuel Friling, a refugee from Germany, described the plight of thousands of destitute Jews in Europe. Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, a leader of the women's division, and Isidore Hershfield, co-chairman of the drive, said that the success of the drive would depend on reaching many small contributors.

McGill Appeals To Wheat Belt For AAA Vote

'Remember 2 Years Ago,' Senator Urges in Radio Address.

By the Associated Press.

Wheat farmers who vote Saturday on whether to continue production control under the AAA, last night were urged by Senator McGill (Democrat), Kansas, to "remember now your condition two years ago."

"You are no longer helpless with reference to your own situation," he said in a radio talk, "because you have the assurance that the wheat farmers throughout America will cooperate with you. Without the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program our basic industry, agriculture, would have continued in a state of ruin."

Praises "Minute Men."

McGill spoke at the close of day in which half a hundred farm leaders met in a closed session to plan support of the AAA and Secretary Wallace's "clarifying" licensing amendments to the law. Those meeting refused to discuss the proceedings, but in a formal statement the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation said:

"These leaders constitute the minute men of agriculture, every one of whom represents home groups which in the aggregate include hundreds of thousands of farmers producing dairy, grain, live stock, wool, corn, cotton, fruit, vegetables and other products of the soil.

"They admit they are here to formulate agriculture's support of the AAA amendments and the agricultural adjustment act as so amended. * * * Their purpose is to present a united front."

Ten Millions for Cotton.

At the Capitol, meanwhile, the House Rules Committee decided to call on Wallace to explain more fully the nature of the amendments which already have been approved by the Agriculture Committee. This decision was expected to delay floor consideration of the amending bill until next week. How much debate shall be allowed was one of the problems confronting the rules group.

A total of 319,999 checks for $10,925,495 in rental payment to farmers taking part in the 1935 cotton production program have been prepared for mailing by the AAA, it was announced yesterday. A year ago at this time, only 117,109 checks for $4,739,857 had been prepared.

Silver Coin Ban Hits Ten Nations

Canadian Money Is Not Affected by Ruling.

By the Associated Press.

Treasury statistics disclosed yesterday that silver coins of at least ten countries would be forbidden entry into the United States under the new import ban.

The silver content of the coins of the following countries was described as more valuable as bullion than as money: Bolivia, Chile, China, Costa Rico, Colombia, Hong Kong, Mexico, Peru, Salvadore, and Uruguay.

This list was based on latest information available to the department.

Treasury officials said that Canadian money was not affected.

Youth Admits Slaying 15-Year-Old Maine Girl

Belfast, Maine, May 21 (AP).—Attorney General Clyde R. Chapman tonight said Frederick Reynolds, 19, had confessed he had assaulted and killed 15-year-old Eileen Folsom, whose body was found 2 miles from her home today. Chapman said Reynolds confessed after officers had become suspicious of him because of a chance remark he made.

The girl, a freshman in high school, was missed by her mother and father last night when she failed to return from school. Today the mother reported her absence to the school superintendent. Police found her body under a tree. Her head was crushed.

Circus Elephant Snaps Chains, Fatally Gores Trainer in West

Man Is Second Killed in Ten Days at Animals' Winter Quarters.

Los Angeles, May 21.—The sudden reversion of caged animals to the killing instincts of their jungle forbears claimed the life today of the second trainer here in ten days.

"Prince," bull elephant leader of the herd at Al G. Barnes Circus winter quarters at Baldwin Park, fatally gored Joe Reed, veteran animal trainer, as Reed was putting eight elephants and 12 tigers through their paces for a jungle film. Reed died in a hospital.

On May 12, Harman Ziegler, likewise an experienced animal trainer, died of wounds inflicted when 15 lions went wild at a lion farm at El Monte.

In both cases the animals reverted in a flash to their primitive instincts.

Reed met death when the elephant herd stampeded. Snapping its heavy chains as if they were paper, Prince attacked Reed, goring him three times, while the other elephants charged wildly about.

Reed's tigers took no part in the killing, running instead to their cage, screaming and snarling.

Ziegler died in the same sort of a burst of animal hatred. His lions were docilely learning to mount a stool when one turned on him as he stumbled. Before anyone could interfere, the entire 15 pounced on him.

An inquest into Reed's death will be heard Thursday.

End of Impasse Looms on Ban Of Holding Unit

House Democrats Confer Secretly With Roosevelt to Break Deadlock.

By the Associated Press.

A break in the House Interstate Commerce sub-committee deadlock over abolition of public utility holding companies was hinted yesterday after a secret White House conference attended by Democratic members of the sub-committee Monday night.

One member, who would not be quoted because of the iron-bound secrecy rule thrown around the sub-committee work on the controversial Administration legislation, privately expressed the opinion a measure satisfactory to the President and Congress would be worked out.

No one would say, however, whether that meant President Roosevelt had modified his stand for abolition of "unnecessary" holding units.

The sub-committee has been laboring for weeks in an effort to devise some way of drafting legislation to meet the President's wishes and still satisfy members on the closely divided committee who insist the "death sentence" not be imposed on the holding companies.

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee has approved a draft of the measure calling for abolition, but allowing a maximum of two years more grace beyond the 1940 deadline set in the original Wheeler-Rayburn bill.

It was understood the much-objected-to provision to require a company to make its line common carrier for another company's power if the Government demanded, would not be in the new draft. Likewise, the sub-committee was understood to have decided against attempting to regulate electric transmission of power produced incidental to manufacturing operations.

It was undecided whether to retain the natural gas or pipe line control provisions, which are not in the Senate bill.

Officials Weigh Tydings, Plan Of Wrld Talks

Proposal Attracts Wide Interest; Administration Silent.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

The proposal yesterday of Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, for an international conference to be held here in the near future to negotiate agreements on war debts, reduction of armaments, international stabilization of currencies and a lowering of foreign trade barriers brought no immediate response from the executive branch of the Government.

Nevertheless, the proposal laid before the Senate by the Maryland Democrat was not summarily dismissed in any responsible quarter of the Administration. The Administration adopted a cautious attitude, with members of the Cabinet concerned explaining they would like to know more about the Tydings resolution before commenting.

In some quarters the belief prevails that the time is approaching when this country must again consult its neighbors of the world regarding such vexsome problems as currency stabilization, war debts and armaments. It is a controversial question whether the approach should be made directly between this and other nations or in an international conference. There also is widespread objection to convening such a conference in Washington.

Supported by Levinson.

The Tydings resolution, however, attracted deep interest, especially since Salmon O. Levinson, Chicago lawyer and peace advocate, is supporting the Maryland Democrat. Consummation of the so-called Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact is now credited to the persistent efforts of Mr. Levinson.

Senator Tydings' resolution would place the Senate on record as requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise such governments as he may deem appropriate that this Government desires at once to take up directly with them, with a view to entering into international agreements and treaties with other nations at a conference to be held in the city of Washington, the following matters:

"The settlement of the intergovernmental debts.

"The means of obtaining a substantial curtailment in world armaments and a holiday in world armament construction.

"The means of securing a stabilization of the currency systems of the world, and

"The means for reviving world trade, all to such an extent and under such terms as may be agreed upon."

"Reasonable Settlement."

Senator Tydings, in a speech to the Senate explaining the objective of his resolution, proposed "a reasonable cash settlement of the war debts" and "a drastic general reduction of armament, as nearly pro rata as possible, including an immediate five-year holiday or moratorium in arms construction."

Recalling that another installment on the war debts is due June 15 and in all probability will not be met, Senator Tydings said he was not proposing that this country revise the existing debt agreements unless such action were made part of a program to scale down armaments, stabilize currencies and lower barriers to the flow of world commerce.

He maintained, however, that adjustment of war debts was "an indispensable item" in the solution of world problems. Contending that our difficulties are largely external, requiring external treatment, Senator Tydings asserted that "the situation calls for a surgical operation, not a mustard plaster."

"What we want is a cure, not a palliative—a permanent, not a temporary treatment of these matters," he asserted.

"The business of the collection of the war debts owing to this Government," he said, "is now at a recognized and sterile standstill." Congress should adopt the "horse sense" of business men, he asserted, and make the best possible adjustment of these debts.

Way to Balance Budget.

As for disarmament, he continued, "the easiest possible way to balance our budget and, indeed, to balance every national budget in the world, is to get an agreement of the nations to cease building armaments for a while." An immediate 5-year arms-construction holiday, he said, would be the "greatest single short cut out of the depression for all the nations."

"It will also be the first de facto world declaration of peace in history," Senator Tydings added.

He estimated that the United States under such an arms holiday would save in regular construction about $300,000,000 annually and that "doubtless we could also manage to avoid the expenditure of a large part of the $1,000,000,000 under our present naval bill." He contended that in the same way European nations could save perhaps $1,000,000,000 a year during such holiday.

"Thus their internal national budgets could be put into balance and an immediate and vast increase in world buying power would also come," he asserted.

The Marylander contended there were two alternatives—"to leave things as they are, in spite of the deadly drift toward ruin which a continuance of the present situation will inevitably entail" or "to act to avoid the deadly drift, to turn its flank."

had to expend is so small that to state the amount would be to make these political critics laughable—if anything more than their own statements is needed to make them laughable.

"We suggest that, at the same time the expenses of Senator Nye's office, which we do not challenge, be made public, together with those of other foes of NRA and the Administration."

Meantime, a movement was discernible among House Ways and Means committeemen, hearing Richberg, to abolish industry's support of the NRA by code assessments and substitute full Government support. By coincidence, this came as Judge F. Dickinson Letts, of the District Supreme Court, restrained the NRA from removing a Blue Eagle in the case of a firm which had refused to support the code authority for the graphic arts industry.

It was the first case in which NRA's right to force collection of code assessments had been challenged in court, according to Weinberg & Sweeten, attorneys for the National Color Printing Co., Inc., Baltimore. In upholding the contention that code assessments constitute an "unlawful tax," beyond the power of NRA, Judge Letts required Government officials to show cause by May 24 why the restraining order should not be made permanent.

Judge Letts also issued a restraining order in the case of the Century Manufacturing Co., the Morris Weinman Co. and the Fredericksburg Shirt Co., of Virginia, and the Hurlock Shirt Co., of Maryland, preventing NRA from depriving these concerns of the use of NRA labels. The companies had been charged with failure to comply with wage-and-hour code provisions.

Richberg conceded in his testimony that code assessments, and, in many cases, overlapping code assessments, have been the source of much criticism. Interest in abolishing this form of code support was manifested by both Democrats and Republicans on the House Committee.

The pending Doughton resolution, which extends NRA for two years in a form acceptable to the Administration, came under the drum fire of Republican committee members. The measure was drafted by Democrats on the committee with the help of Richberg and Charles West, White House "liaison man" on Capitol Hill, which prompted a remark by Representative Allen T. Treadway, Massachusetts Republican, that "Mr. Richberg told you what to report."

"Not at all, not at all," Chairman Robert L. Doughton disagreed.

Much of the debate touched on the function of the Federal Trade Commission in the new set-up. Under the Doughton bill, this agency would serve as the enforcement branch of the NRA. In reply to charges that the commission would be subordinated and "cluttered up" by NRA violations, Richberg countered:

"On the contrary, it would be the first opportunity the Trade Commission has ever had to do what it was created in 1914 to do—that is, create standards of fair practices. As a matter of fact, the job never has been done."

Hitler to Join in Peace Moves; Wants Colonies Taken in War

tary service," but may be given exceptional leaves from duty.

The law creates the office of minister of war, instead of a minister of defense.

The defense law provides that obligation for service in the armed forces begins with the eighteenth year and ends March 31, after the forty-fifth birthday. Conscripts as a rule will join the forces the year in which they become 20, but they may join up voluntarily earlier.

A period of "labor service" must be completed as a preliminary condition to joining the armed services.

Hitler made the colonial issue a major point in a 13-point program, denouncing the League of Nations' censure of his re-armament program in violation of the Versailles Treaty.

"New discriminations against Germany at Geneva," Hitler said, "will make it impossible for Germany to return to the league until provisions for actual equality of all members has been established."

Pre-War Might Is Aim.

He emphasized that his air force, conscript army program and naval demands were the start of a campaign to restore Germany to her pre-war martial might.

"These demands are only the beginning," he shouted. "They will be completed by a demand for return of our colonies.

"However, the German government declares with binding force that this demand is, for Germany, a final and lasting one. Germany has neither the intention nor the necessity nor the possibility of entering a new armament race."

Hitler told the Reichstag—and the world, which listened to an international broadcast—that the German government "willingly recognizes the overwhelming vital importance and justification for dominant sea protection for the British Empire," but reiterated his demands for a navy at least 35 per cent the size of Britain's.

He added that he was "determined to do everything to protect our own continental existence and freedom."

"The German government," he proclaimed in a husky voice, "has the sincere intention to reach and maintain relations with the British state which will forever prevent repetition of a single conflict between these two nations."

Hitler reviewed the Nazi party's reconstruction of the Reich under his rule since January, 1933.

"When President Von Hindenburg gave me the government two years ago," he said, "many doubted my power. It needed great courage to begin work immediately to raise the nation from the depths.

'I as leader make decisions alone—'I have no chance to pass the responsibilities to others.

"We Germans can only complain that the rest of the world shows such little understanding of our situation."

Outstanding points in Hitler's Reichstag address, firm yet not flamboyant in tone, included:

1. Demand for eventual return of Germany's colonies taken from her in the World War.

2. Rejection of the league's censure of his conscript army program, violating the treaties.

3. Announcement of a decree providing compulsory military service for one year, under the new defense law passed by the cabinet.

4. A charge the former allied powers first violated the Versailles Treaty by failing to disarm, as promised.

5. Germany will continue to observe the demilitarization of the Rhineland zone.

6. Germany is ready to eliminate submarines if the other sea powers do likewise.

7. Germany is willing to participate in a system of collective collaboration guaranteeing European peace (presumably without the mutual armed assistance clauses).

8. Germany deems it necessary to keep the "road open to treaty revision."

9. Denunciation of warfare on defenseless women and children, and urging aerial bombing outside actual war zones be outlawed.

10. Elimination of heaviest artillery and tanks as most dangerous offensive weapons.

11. Limitation of size of guns on warships of all classes, and of tonnage of warships to lessen danger of a war of aggression by sea.

11. Proposal to open a systematic attack "upon the poisoning of public opinion" through the press, films and theater.

13. Germany's willingness to enter any international agreement to make impossible external interference in the affairs of any nations; but with this an international definition of "interference."

May Discard Entire Pact.

Hitler threatened to denounce the entire Treaty of Versailles, unless the other powers "revise their armies down to Germany's level."

"If they had accepted any constructive plan for an army of 300,000 men (for Germany)," Hitler said, "the problem would be much simpler today. But in view of their refusal to disarm, I saw myself forced to declare Germany's equality to the world."

Hitler appeared before the Reichstag at 8 p. m. and laid down a program on Germany's foreign policy.

The address, long awaited, opened with Hitler's blunt declaration that "the German government rejects the Geneva decision of April 17."

"Germany has not unilaterally violated the Versailles Treaty," Hitler asserted, "but the dictates of the Versailles accord have been unilaterally violated, and thereby invalidated by those powers who could not decide to let their own disarmament, as provided by treaty, follow the disarmament demanded of Germany.

"New discriminations against Germany thus made at Geneva will make it impossible for Germany to return to the league until provisions for actual equality of all members has been established.

"To this end, the German government has deemed it necessary to make clear the division between the Treaty of Versailles, which is based on differentiation between nations as to the victor and vanquished, and the League of Nations, which is based on equality of a value and rights for all of its members.

"This equality must comprise all the titles and functions in international life."

Senate Breaks Long Filibuster By 44-4 Vote

Joint Session Ordered to Hear the President's Veto Message.

ator John H. Bankhead's (Democrat), Alabama.

Weary from hours of continuous speaking, his hair rumpled, his linen in disarray, Long listened dazedly to the voting, cast his own "no" ballot, and then fled the chamber. It was an angry Senate that voted, with some of the Louisianan's stanchest Senate counselors among the impatient.

Thomas Refuses to Aid.

Even the bonus inflationist leader, Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, was outraged at Huey's procedure, and cast his vote for the joint session. He felt Long's exhibition weakened the bonus position. No Congress on record ever has refused a President a hearing.

The House is expected to vote today on the veto a few hours after the President's message. The membership is overwhelmingly for the Patman bonus bill, and leaders doubt that even the appearance of the President will stem an overriding two-thirds vote.

The President's strongest support will come in the Senate, where a vote will come later in the week. A rally of that chamber's Patman bloc, attended by Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, U. S. M. C., retired, yesterday failed to produce the votes needed to override.

Senate leaders insist the President will be sustained by at least 5 votes. In that event, Thomas is expected to swing his support to the three-headed compromise of Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, giving the President a choice between payment of the bonus through a bond issue, by issuance of new currency or from a works fund allotment.

Calls Huey "Ass."

Even had Long's filibuster been successful, it would have served no material purpose. Individual Senators signified intention of attending today's House session regardless of disposition of the concurrent resolution. The inevitable reaction would have been in the President's favor, leaders contended.

Still Majority Leader Robinson refused to move for a recess. He said he was willing "to let Long make an ass of himself."

Long's retort was to speak, with a few interruptions, from 2:30 until 7:15 p. m. He exhausted his every point of issue with the President, from the recently announced $19-to-$94-a-month works program wage scales to the recent farmers' march on Washington.

Failed on Rules.

He went down at last in an intricate tangle of Senate rules, unfamiliarity with which has been his frequent boast. He went out on three counts. They were:

1. His rush from the chamber before his personally ordered quorum call had started.

2. Invoking of a little-used Senate rule that no Senator may speak more than twice in one day on the same question.

3. Huey's inadvertence in casting a "no" ballot, when a refusal to vote might have held up completion of a Senate quorum.

Although Huey's harangue was directed bitingly at the President himself, he detoured at times to pay his compliments to individual members of the Senate, notably to Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee. Huey was still smarting from defeat of his projected investigation of Postmaster General Farley, engineered by McKellar.

Long lashed the Tennesseean into a fury by detailing his Senate record, comparing the low-tariff stand of McKellar to his high-tariff votes for Tennessee products.

McKellar Waves Fists.

McKellar returned the attack with a tirade of personalities, shaking his fists and flailing his arms as he charged Long "has gone back on the party that made him."

"He owes everything he has to the Democratic Party—yes, the party is chargeable with that in Louisiana," shouted McKellar.

Parrying every thrust with a humorous jibe, Long drew roars of laughter from the galleries.

Garner's worn gavel pounded unceasingly for order.

"The chair should not be too harsh with the galleries," interjected Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky. "When they come to the circus, they ought to be permitted to laugh at the monkey."

Huey laughed that one off, too.

"I resent that statement about my friend from Tennessee," he said.

Turning again to his assault on the President, Long said Mr. Roosevelt had divided the country into four divisions for works program wage purposes "with the boys South of the Mason-Dixon Line in the $19 division."

"That is what we get from our beloved President," Long said. "I repeat, b-e-l-o-v-e-d President, Nineteen dollars a month! In the old days they called pronunciamentoes by the Pope a 'Papal Bull.' This ought to be called a 'White House Bull.' Nineteen dollars a month! That ought to interest the Senator from Tennessee, who supports our beloved President on these things."

Eight Senators There at Six.

At 6 p. m., Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, reminded Long there were only eight Senators present, and asked him how long he intended to speak.

"If the Senator comes back in three hours, he will be safe," replied Huey, his hair tousled, his voice hoarse.

Huey talked about everything but the bonus until Senate Majority Leader Robinson sought unanimous consent to vote on a resolution for a joint session. Long refused to yield the floor, insisting he "wasn't going to be ordered around by the President."

Earlier in the day, Senator Steiwer renewed his opposition to the joint session on Constitutional grounds. But Steiwer declined to participate in the Long filibuster.

"It isn't worth it," he said.

In vain, Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, and others sought to convince Long that the Senate should adopt the Robinson resolution.

Calls It "Reflection."

"To longer discuss this matter would be a reflection on the Senate, not on the House or the President," Borah said. "I don't see why we should object. We should not be fugitives from knowledge. I am anxious to get the President views."

"I don't intend to be used as a sounding board for his lecture," retorted Huey. "He is calling 125,000,000 people in for a whipping."

The Kingfish said it "reminded him of hog-killing time."

Senator Steiwer, opening the assault on the proposed joint session, read the formula for vetoing legislation, provided in Article 1, Section 7, of the Constitution, as follows:

"* * * if he shall approve it he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, and if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become law." * * *

Opposes "Stage Setting."

Steiwer said his only objection was that the Robinson resolution proposed that the Senate meet with the House, and that the legislation should not be returnto to the house in which it originated, but to a joint session.

"I can see no reason for turning away from the Constitution in order to provide a sort of stage setting or window dressing for a more effective delivery of the President's message," said Steiwer. "The time has come when somebody ought to say something in behalf of regularity in Government."

Steiwer said the courts throughout the land were denouncing New Deal legislation because of its disregard for the Constitution. He mentioned the NRA "hot oil" case, the railway pension act, and other acts challenged in the courts.

"Since the begining of the New Deal until this moment not a single piece of legislation has been sustained in its entirety by the Supreme Court," he continued.

Officials Weigh Tydings, Plan Of Wrld Talks

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

The proposal yesterday of Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, for an international conference to be held here in the near future to negotiate agreements on war debts, reduction of armaments, international stabilization of currencies and a lowering of foreign trade barriers brought no immediate response from the executive branch of the Government.

Nevertheless, the proposal laid before the Senate by the Maryland Democrat was not summarily dismissed in any responsible quarter of the Administration. The Administration adopted a cautious attitude, with members of the Cabinet concerned explaining they would like to know more about the Tydings resolution before commenting.

In some quarters the belief prevails that the time is approaching when this country must again consult its neighbors of the world regarding such vexsome problems as currency stabilization, war debts and armaments. It is a controversial question whether the approach should be made directly between this and other nations or in an international conference. There also is widespread objection to convening such a conference in Washington.

Supported by Levinson.

The Tydings resolution, however, attracted deep interest, especially since Salmon O. Levinson, Chicago lawyer and peace advocate, is supporting the Maryland Democrat. Consummation of the so-called Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact is now credited to the persistent efforts of Mr. Levinson.

Senator Tydings' resolution would place the Senate on record as requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to advise such governments as he may deem appropriate that this Government desires at once to take up directly with them, with a view to entering into international agreements and treaties with other nations at a conference to be held in the city of Washington, the following matters:

"The settlement of the intergovernmental debts.

"The means of obtaining a substantial curtailment in world armaments and a holiday in world armament construction.

"The means of securing a stabilization of the currency systems of the world, and

"The means for reviving world trade, all to such an extent and under such terms as may be agreed upon."

"Reasonable Settlement."

Senator Tydings, in a speech to the Senate explaining the objective of his resolution, proposed "a reasonable cash settlement of the war debts" and "a drastic general reduction of armament, as nearly pro rata as possible, including an immediate five-year holiday or moratorium in arms construction."

Recalling that another installment on the war debts is due June 15 and in all probability will not be met, Senator Tydings said he was not proposing that this country revise the existing debt agreements unless such action were made part of a program to scale down armaments, stabilize currencies and lower barriers to the flow of world commerce.

He maintained, however, that adjustment of war debts was "an indispensable item" in the solution of world problems. Contending that our difficulties are largely external, requiring external treatment, Senator Tydings asserted that "the situation calls for a surgical operation, not a mustard plaster."

"What we want is a cure, not a palliative—a permanent, not a temporary treatment of these matters," he asserted.

"The business of the collection of the war debts owing to this Government," he said, "is now at a recognized and sterile standstill." Congress should adopt the "horse sense" of business men, he asserted, and make the best possible adjustment of these debts.

Way to Balance Budget.

As for disarmament, he continued, "the easiest possible way to balance our budget and, indeed, to balance every national budget in the world, is to get an agreement of the nations to cease building armaments for a while." An immediate 5-year arms-construction holiday, he said, would be the "greatest single short cut out of the depression for all the nations."

"It will also be the first de facto world declaration of peace in history," Senator Tydings added.

He estimated that the United States under such an arms holiday would save in regular construction about $300,000,000 annually and that "doubtless we could also manage to avoid the expenditure of a large part of the $1,000,000,000 under our present naval bill." He contended that in the same way European nations could save perhaps $1,000,000,000 a year during such holiday.

"Thus their internal national budgets could be put into balance and an immediate and vast increase in world buying power would also come," he asserted.

The Marylander contended there were two alternatives—"to leave things as they are, in spite of the deadly drift toward ruin which a continuance of the present situation will inevitably entail" or "to act to avoid the deadly drift, to turn its flank."

had to expend is so small that to state the amount would be to make these political critics laughable—if anything more than their own statements is needed to make them laughable.

"We suggest that, at the same time the expenses of Senator Nye's office, which we do not challenge, be made public, together with those of other foes of NRA and the Administration."

Meantime, a movement was discernible among House Ways and Means committeemen, hearing Richberg, to abolish industry's support of the NRA by code assessments and substitute full Government support. By coincidence, this came as Judge F. Dickinson Letts, of the District Supreme Court, restrained the NRA from removing a Blue Eagle in the case of a firm which had refused to support the code authority for the graphic arts industry.

It was the first case in which NRA's right to force collection of code assessments had been challenged in court, according to Weinberg & Sweeten, attorneys for the National Color Printing Co., Inc., Baltimore. In upholding the contention that code assessments constitute an "unlawful tax," beyond the power of NRA, Judge Letts required Government officials to show cause by May 24 why the restraining order should not be made permanent.

Judge Letts also issued a restraining order in the case of the Century Manufacturing Co., the Morris Weinman Co. and the Fredericksburg Shirt Co., of Virginia, and the Hurlock Shirt Co., of Maryland, preventing NRA from depriving these concerns of the use of NRA labels. The companies had been charged with failure to comply with wage-and-hour code provisions.

Richberg conceded in his testimony that code assessments, and, in many cases, overlapping code assessments, have been the source of much criticism. Interest in abolishing this form of code support was manifested by both Democrats and Republicans on the House Committee.

The pending Doughton resolution, which extends NRA for two years in a form acceptable to the Administration, came under the drum fire of Republican committee members. The measure was drafted by Democrats on the committee with the help of Richberg and Charles West, White House "liaison man" on Capitol Hill, which prompted a remark by Representative Allen T. Treadway, Massachusetts Republican, that "Mr. Richberg told you what to report."

"Not at all, not at all," Chairman Robert L. Doughton disagreed.

Much of the debate touched on the function of the Federal Trade Commission in the new set-up. Under the Doughton bill, this agency would serve as the enforcement branch of the NRA. In reply to charges that the commission would be subordinated and "cluttered up" by NRA violations, Richberg countered:

"On the contrary, it would be the first opportunity the Trade Commission has ever had to do what it was created in 1914 to do—that is, create standards of fair practices. As a matter of fact, the job never has been done."

Hitler to Join in Peace Moves; Wants Colonies Taken in War

tary service," but may be given exceptional leaves from duty.

The law creates the office of minister of war, instead of a minister of defense.

The defense law provides that obligation for service in the armed forces begins with the eighteenth year and ends March 31, after the forty-fifth birthday. Conscripts as a rule will join the forces the year in which they become 20, but they may join up voluntarily earlier.

A period of "labor service" must be completed as a preliminary condition to joining the armed services.

Hitler made the colonial issue a major point in a 13-point program, denouncing the League of Nations' censure of his re-armament program in violation of the Versailles Treaty.

"New discriminations against Germany at Geneva," Hitler said, "will make it impossible for Germany to return to the league until provisions for actual equality of all members has been established."

Pre-War Might Is Aim.

He emphasized that his air force, conscript army program and naval demands were the start of a campaign to restore Germany to her pre-war martial might.

"These demands are only the beginning," he shouted. "They will be completed by a demand for return of our colonies.

"However, the German government declares with binding force that this demand is, for Germany, a final and lasting one. Germany has neither the intention nor the necessity nor the possibility of entering a new armament race."

Hitler told the Reichstag—and the world, which listened to an international broadcast—that the German government "willingly recognizes the overwhelming vital importance and justification for dominant sea protection for the British Empire," but reiterated his demands for a navy at least 35 per cent the size of Britain's.

He added that he was "determined to do everything to protect our own continental existence and freedom."

"The German government," he proclaimed in a husky voice, "has the sincere intention to reach and maintain relations with the British state which will forever prevent repetition of a single conflict between these two nations."

Hitler reviewed the Nazi party's reconstruction of the Reich under his rule since January, 1933.

"When President Von Hindenburg gave me the government two years ago," he said, "many doubted my power. It needed great courage to begin work immediately to raise the nation from the depths.

"I as leader make decisions alone—I have no chance to pass the responsibilities to others.

"We Germans can only complain that the rest of the world shows such little understanding of our situation."

Outstanding points in Hitler's Reichstag address, firm yet not flamboyant in tone, included:

1. Demand for eventual return of Germany's colonies taken from her in the World War.

2. Rejection of the league's censure of his conscript army program, violating the treaties.

3. Announcement of a decree providing compulsory military service for one year, under the new defense law passed by the cabinet.

4. A charge the former allied powers first violated the Versailles Treaty by failing to disarm, as promised.

5. Germany will continue to observe the demilitarization of the Rhineland zone.

6. Germany is ready to eliminate submarines if the other sea powers do likewise.

7. Germany is willing to participate in a system of collective collaboration guaranteeing European peace (presumabily without the mutual armed assistance clauses).

8. Germany deems it necessary to keep the "road open to treaty revision."

9. Denunciation of warfare on defenseless women and children, and urging aerial bombing outside actual war zones be outlawed.

10. Elimination of heaviest artillery and tanks as most dangerous offensive weapons.

11. Limitation of size of guns on warships of all classes, and of tonnage of warships to lessen danger of a war of aggression by sea.

11. Proposal to open a systematic attack "upon the poisoning of public opinion" through the press, films and theater.

13. Germany's willingness to enter any international agreement to make impossible external interference in the affairs of any nations; but with this an international definition of "interference."

May Discard Entire Pact.

Hitler threatened to denounce the entire Treaty of Versailles, unless the other powers "revise their armies down to Germany's level."

"If they had accepted any constructive plan for an army of 300,000 men (for Germany)," Hitler said, "the problem would be much simpler today. But in view of their refusal to disarm, I saw myself forced to declare Germany's equality to the world."

Hitler appeared before the Reichstag at 8 p. m. and laid down a program on Germany's foreign policy.

The address, long awaited, opened with Hitler's blunt declaration that "the German government rejects the Geneva decision of April 17."

"Germany has not unilaterally violated the Versailles Treaty," Hitler asserted, "but the dictates of the Versailles accord have been unilaterally violated, and thereby invalidated by those powers who could not decide to let their own disarmament, as provided by treaty, follow the disarmament demanded of Germany.

"New discriminations against Germany thus made at Geneva will make it impossible for Germany to return to the league until provisions for actual equality of all members has been established.

"To this end, the German government has deemed it necessary to make clear the division between the Treaty of Versailles, which is based on differentiation between nations as to the victor and vanquished, and the League of Nations, which is based on equality of a value and rights for all of its members.

"This equality must comprise all the titles and functions in international life."

Senate Breaks Long Filibuster By 44-4 Vote

Joint Session Ordered to Hear the President's Veto Message.

ator John H. Bankhead's (Democrat), Alabama.

Weary from hours of continuous speaking, his hair rumpled, his linen in disarray, Long listened dazedly to the voting, cast his own "no" ballot, and then fled the chamber. It was an angry Senate that voted, with some of the Louisianan's stanchest Senate counselors among the impatient.

Thomas Refuses to Aid.

Even the bonus inflationist leader, Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, was outraged at Huey's procedure, and cast his vote for the joint session. He felt Long's exhibition weakened the bonus position. No Congress on record ever has refused a President a hearing.

The House is expected to vote today on the veto a few hours after the President's message. The membership is overwhelmingly for the Patman bonus bill, and leaders doubt that even the appearance of the President will stem an overriding two-thirds vote.

The President's strongest support will come in the Senate, where a vote will come later in the week. A rally of that chamber's Patman bloc, attended by Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, U. S. M. C., retired, yesterday failed to produce the votes needed to override.

Senate leaders insist the President will be sustained by at least 5 votes. In that event, Thomas is expected to swing his support to the three-headed compromise of Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, giving the President a choice between payment of the bonus through a bond issue, by issuance of new currency or from a works fund allotment.

Calls Huey "Ass."

Even had Long's filibuster been successful, it would have served no material purpose. Individual Senators signified intention of attending today's House session regardless of disposition of the concurrent resolution. The inevitable reaction would have been in the President's favor, leaders contended.

Still Majority Leader Robinson refused to move for a recess. He said he was willing "to let Long make an ass of himself."

Long's retort was to speak, with a few interruptions, from 2:30 until 7:15 p. m. He exhausted his every point of issue with the President, from the recently announced $19-to-$94-a-month works program wage scales to the recent farmers' march on Washington.

Failed on Rules.

He went down at last in an intricate tangle of Senate rules, unfamiliarity with which has been his frequent boast. He went out on three counts. They were:

1. His rush from the chamber before his personally ordered quorum call had started.

2. Invoking of a little-used Senate rule that no Senator may speak more than twice in one day on the same question.

3. Huey's inadvertence in casting a "no" ballot, when a refusal to vote might have held up completion of a Senate quorum.

Although Huey's harangue was directed bitingly at the President himself, he detoured at times to pay his compliments to individual members of the Senate, notably to Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee. Huey was still smarting from defeat of his projected investigation of Postmaster General Farley, engineered by McKellar.

Long lashed the Tennesseean into a fury by detailing his Senate record, comparing the low-tariff stand of McKellar to his high-tariff votes for Tennessee products.

McKellar Waves Fists.

McKellar returned the attack with a tirade of personalities, shaking his fists and flailing his arms as he charged Long "has gone back on the party that made him."

"He owes everything he has to the Democratic Party—yes, the party is chargeable with that in Louisiana," shouted McKellar.

Parrying every thrust with a humorous jibe, Long drew roars of laughter from the galleries.

Garner's worn gavel pounded unceasingly for order.

"The chair should not be too harsh with the galleries," interjected Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky. "When they come to the circus, they ought to be permitted to laugh at the monkey."

Huey laughed that one off, too.

"I resent that statement about my friend from Tennessee," he said.

Turning again to his assault on the President, Long said Mr. Roosevelt had divided the country into four divisions for works program wage purposes "with the boys South of the Mason-Dixon Line in the $19 division."

"That is what we get from our beloved President," Long said. "I repeat, b-e-l-o-v-e-d President, Nineteen dollars a month! In the old days they called pronunciamentoes by the Pope a 'Papal Bull.' This ought to be called a 'White House Bull.' Nineteen dollars a month! That ought to interest the Senator from Tennessee, who supports our beloved President on these things."

Eight Senators There at Six.

At 6 p. m., Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, reminded Long there were only eight Senators present, and asked him how long he intended to speak.

"If the Senator comes back in three hours, he will be safe," replied Huey, his hair tousled, his voice hoarse.

Huey talked about everything but the bonus until Senate Majority Leader Robinson sought unanimous consent to vote on a resolution for a joint session. Long refused to yield the floor, insisting he "wasn't going to be ordered around by the President."

Earlier in the day, Senator Steiwer renewed his opposition to the joint session on Constitutional grounds. But Steiwer declined to participate in the Long filibuster.

"It isn't worth it," he said.

Calls It "Reflection."

"To longer discuss this matter would be a reflection on the Senate, not on the House or the President," Borah said. "I don't see why we should object. We should not be fugitives from knowledge. I am anxious to get the President views."

"I don't intend to be used as a sounding board for his lecture," retorted Huey. "He is calling 125,000,000 people in for a whipping."

The Kingfish said it "reminded him of hog-killing time."

Senator Steiwer, opening the assault on the proposed joint session, read the formula for vetoing legislation, provided in Article 1, Section 7, of the Constitution, as follows:

"* * * if he shall approve it he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, and if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become law." * * *

Opposes "Stage Setting."

Steiwer said his only objection was that the Robinson resolution proposed that the Senate meet with the House, and that the legislation should not be returnto to the house in which it originated, but to a joint session.

"I can see no reason for turning away from the Constitution in order to provide a sort of stage setting or window dressing for a more effective delivery of the President's message," said Steiwer. "The time has come when somebody ought to say something in behalf of regularity in Government."

Steiwer said the courts throughout the land were denouncing New Deal legislation because of its disregard for the Constitution. He mentioned the NRA "hot oil" case, the railway pension act, and other acts challenged in the courts.

"Since the begining of the New Deal until this moment not a single piece of legislation has been sustained in its entirety by the Supreme Court," he continued.

Jurors Probing N. Y. Vice Oust Their Attorney

Prosecutor Dodge Given 6 Names From Which to Choose Successor.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 21.—A run-away county grand jury virtually ousted District Attorney William C. Dodge from its investigation of vice, bail bond and policy rackets today and laid the groundwork for the appointment of a prosecutor of its own choosing.

The sensational action of the grand jury followed a public demand by the city affairs committee last week for Governor Herbert Lehman to supplant Dodge, and the sentencing of a newspaper man for contempt of court in refusing to disclose sources of information for published vice and racket disclosures.

A committee from the grand jury, which recently dropped the District Attorney from its councils, called on Dodge and came away with an agreement to submit to him the names of six lawyers from which he will select one as a special prosecutor.

Reporter's Sentence Delayed.

In general sessions court, meanwhile, Martin Mooney, a reporter, who is under sentence of 30 days in jail and $500 fine for contempt of court, won postponement until next Monday of argument on a habeas corpus application.

The Mooney incident led the grand jury to deliver a statement expressing the opinion that a powerful Manhattan politician was furnishing protection for racket overlords. This protection, the grand jury said, was of such proportions that it led "to the courts themselves."

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 21.—Seeking a quick test of the constitutionality of the State's unique public enemy act—requiring persons with "evil reputations" arrested for consorting to prove they were not planning a crime—police today rushed toward trial the first ten alleged gangsters picked up under the law.

The law makes known racketeers or criminals subject to conviction for disorderly conduct if they are unable to prove they did not consort for illegal purposes. Before the law was amended by the Legislature at this session the burden of proof was on the police.

Income Agents Cooperate.

The ten youthful alleged gangsters were held in default of $1,000 bail each. Two of them had no police records and only one had more than one conviction against him.

Co-operating with police are Federal income tax agents. Police were said to be working with the agents in tracing expenditures of known racketeers in connection with operation of race tracks, racing stables and night clubs.

Many Reported in Flight.

Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine was unwilling to discuss the police "anti-social register," listing leaders and members of the city's seven major gangs. Authorities were said to have under way an inquiry to disclose how existence of the list became known.

Many of the alleged gang leaders on the list were said to have fled the city, but it was reported that Federal agents were investigating the incomes of such characters as "Little Augie" Pisano, Charles "Bugs" Siegel, Meyer Lansky and "Owney" Madden. The latter's name was not on the list.

Police were also investigating reports that the major gangs had a working agreement under which they avoided rival territories or rackets.

ferred to the scales as "sweat shop" wages.

"The NRA codes established wages that eliminated the sweat shop," he said. "But now the President comes along and sets sweat shop wages for those to be employed on public works projects."

In New York, according to the Associated Press, Father Charles E. Coughlin referred to the schedule as "unjust and unliving wages."

In an earlier statement Senator McCarran, author of the resolution, defeated in the Senate, providing that prevailing wages should be paid, said he believed the President's schedule would wreck all wage scales.

Senator Huey Long saw in the wage scales a political maneuver.

"The South gets the lowest wage," he told the Senate, "because there is less need to spend there to get votes."

Secretary Ickes refused to comment on the wage scale, other than to say he had nothing to do with it and that "every man has a right to his own opinion." The latter statement was in reference to Green's criticism.

The wage scale order clears away the most serious obstacle to the actual start of the works relief program. Still to be settled is a policy toward cities in respect to the amount of loans and the amount of grants to be made. Paul V. Bettors, executive secretary of the United States Conference of Mayors, said that the requirement that cities must pay back 70 per cent of the money advanced by the Government was retarding the program.

Meanwhile, Ickes announced completion of his decentralization plan of establishing a "little PWA" in each State, with transfer of 159 Washington employes to various State headquarters.

Beside Mrs. Roosevelt sat Adolph Pacifico, United Mine Workers commissioner, her personal guide on the trip.

"Take good care of her, Adolph," shouted several miners who had just come out of the mine.

Pacifico explained a new kind of roofing in this mine, to prevent accidents.

Won't Phone White House.

The train stopped at a big sign, unusual in coal mines and interesting to the First Lady. It said: "Co-operation Means Success." At one side was the company's sign and at the other was that of the United Mine Workers.

There big R. V. Clay, general manager of the company, called on William Roy, safety director, who welcomed the guests and told of safety precautions.

All along the underground way stood miners. At one stop Clay wanted Mrs. Roosevelt to telephone the President in Washington but she said "I am here to learn, not to do stunts."

Farther into the mountain the cars came at last to the "regular workings," where Mrs. Roosevelt got off and walked along a low, narrow passage to see how they do it.

Scene Is Fantastic.

There was a great machine. Mrs. Roosevelt wanted to know how much the miners make here, how steady their work is, how the machines work.

One of the most fantastic scenes ever enacted in a coal mine, made a background to her questions.

Movie cameras ground, photographers' flashlight bulbs piled up on the coal around Mrs. Roosevelt's feet, miners' lamps made bright gleams against the blackness.

Back at the train, the motorman, Busic, who is president of the local union, told Mrs. Roosevelt his wife had learned knitting at People's University, but he hadn't received a sweater yet.

"I am sure you'll get one soon," she encouraged.

Refuses to Wear Lamp.

Next she refused to put on a miners' light just to make the news reels look better, saying: "I have a great objection to being made to do something that is not necessary. I don't have to wear a lamp to get plenty of light."

After two hours in the mine, Mrs. Roosevelt returned to daylight and spoke over a loud speaker from the mine office to the miners' families.

"This mine is very fine from many points of safety and good conditions," she said. "I hope you all will have a very good thing, in the mines and in the baseball, which I understand is very important."

The union gave her a big box of flowers and she hurried back to a tea in Bellaire and then to dinner given by the miners' families.

Cheering, bare-headed crowds of all ages, mostly in their every-day clothes, lined streets and roads.

Lawrence of Arabia Buried With Simplest Form of Rites

Winston Churchill Unable to Conceal His Grief; Grave Unmarked.

By the Associated Press.

Wool, Dorsetshire, England, May 21.—Col. T. W. Lawrence, the glamorous figure of Arabia and the World War, was buried today in a grave unmarked by wreath or stone.

In the Dorset Moors, far from the scene of his desert triumphs, Lawrence, victim of a motorcycle accident, was buried with simple rites in the little burial plot at the village of Moreton.

Tears welled in the eyes of a few of the mourners as the plain coffin was lowered into the grave. Winston Churchill, war-time minister of munitions, made no effort to conceal his emotions.

There were no words of praise spoken at the burial of the 46-year-old man whose career had become a saga of heroism while he yet lived.

Service Lasts 17 Minutes.

There was a 17-minute funeral service in the tiny church at Moreton, which seats but 170 persons. Then the casket was borne to a four-wheeled handcart, upon which the body of "Lawrence of Arabia" made the last journey.

A coroner's jury decided Lawrence, who was fatally injured May 13, met his end accidentally. Corporal Ernest Catchpole testified he saw Lawrence swerve his motorcycle to avoid hitting an automobile, and collided then with a butcher boy's bicycle. The witness said Lawrence was moving at a speed of between 50 and 60 miles an hour when he struck the bicycle.

A boy who had been a companion of the butcher boy testified he did not see the automobile described by the soldier.

Estate Worth $1,000.

Capt. P. C. Allen, Medical Corps officer who performed the autopsy, was asked by A. W. Lawrence, brother of the victim:

"Had his recvoery somehow taken place, what would have been his condition mentally?"

"Had he lived," the medical man replied, "He would have been unable to speak. He would have lost his memory and been paralyzed."

Lawrence's will bequeathed to his brother an estate of about £200 (about $1,000), some investments, his little cottage at Moreton, the motorcycle and some books and private papers.

Marks Cits Raid To Answer Brown

Questioned by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, as to why he had not reported a suspected gambling establishment in his precinct, Capt. Sidney J. Marks, of the Eleventh Precinct, replied yesterday that he not only had reported the place but even raided it last year.

Capt. Marks, at a recent meeting of police and city officials, declared there were no gambling establishments within his territory. A few days later, members of the vice squad raided a house in the 2400 block of Nichols avenue southeast, less than two blocks from the station house, and arrested several men.

In his answer to Maj. Brown, Capt. Marks reported that records of his precinct show the premises were under suspicion as far back as January 2, 1934. It was raided by his men last April, Capt. Marks said, and Claude Cool, arrested in the recent vice squad raid, was captured.

When he last visited the place, Capt. Marks reported, no evidence of gambling was found. He expressed a belief that operations were started soon before the recent raid.

Away 9 Years, Sherrill Notes Capital Boom

Only Really Prosperous City, Retail Official Tells Ad Club.

Washington is the only really prosperous city in the country, the Advertising Club of Washington was told yesterday by C. O. Sherrill, president of the American Retail Federation.

"The general impression one received on returning here is that the city is in a very prosperous condition. I fear that the prosperity so obvious with hotels packed to overflowing, apartments and houses almost impossible to rent, may give those in authority an incorrect impression of conditions throughout the country," he said.

Returning after an absence of nine and a half years, Mr. Sherrill declared traffic conditions are much worse than when he left here.

"Traffic is greatly congested and moves with great difficulty during the rush hours," he said. "Taxis seem to have multiplied many fold and the streets are packed with pedestrians, indicating a large influx of population during the depression years," he said.

Discussing the activities of his organization, he pointed out that in his experience in the retail field in the last five years "I have found an immediate favorable response to lower prices to the consumer, and an immediate falling off of demand when the prices are increased.

"And burdens borne by the retailer in the shape of taxation or extensively high transportation costs is immediately reflected in the decrease of purchasing power with a lowered standard of living, less consumption and a decrease in employment in the fields of distribution, transportation, manufacturing and farming."

Tax Income Up $549,150,374 In 10 Months

$2,664,853,327 Collected in Internal Revenue, Says Treasury.

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury last night reported internal revenue collections of $2,664,853,327 during the first ten months of the fiscal year, an increase of $549,150,374 over the same 1934 period.

In April, the tenth month, $194,083,458 was received. This was $40,719,662 more than in April, 1934.

Agricultural adjustment taxes continued to lead the way in showing gains, both for the month and for the year. April's income of $46,889,684 was 35 per cent more than April of last year, swelling the ten-month total for this class of revenue to $453,007,693, or an upturn of 57 per cent over 1934.

Miscellaneous internal revenue collections jumped 24 per cent in April to $122,808,927, bringing the year's total to $1,389,339,257, or 14 per cent greater than last year. This main classification included $33,249,450 in liquor taxes collected during April and $333,517,841 received during the 10-month period, representing a gain of 70 per cent over 1934.

Income taxes have produced $822,506,376 thus far in the year, to run 35 per cent ahead of 1934.

The Treasury statement showed 10,696,782,123 small cigarettes were sold during April, an increase of 1,400,000,000 over the same month of last year.

Nanking Denies Tokyo Warning Of Bandit Drive

China Is Able to Police Neutral Area, Japanese Officials Told.

By the Associated Press.

Nanking, May 21.—China's national government, through its foreign office, today vigorously denied receiving any warning that Japan intends to invade the north China demilitarized zone.

A spokesman, commenting on the statement attributed to the Japanese military attache at Shanghai that the Japanese had warned the Chinese of impending military occupation of the zone, to end alleged bandit activities, said "the alleged warning was never given."

While reports from cities near the Great Wall said Japanese troops were moving southward from Jehol Province, Manchukuo, while military planes were massed at the Wall, national government authorities at Peiping told Japanese officials China is quite able to take care of banditry in the area.

Defended by Small Force.

At Shanghai, Chinese military authorities said the demilitarized zone south of the Great Wall, established in the Tangku truce of 1933 that ended Japan's push toward Peiping, was defended only by 6,000 to 9,000 special Chinese police, widely scattered and incapable of offering any resistance to the Japanese.

(Japan has been asked repeatedly but vainly for permission to increase this police force, these sources said, in order to cope with bandits streaming in from the southeast.)

Press reports to Tientsin said 200 Japanese troops traveling in motor trucks had crossed the Great Wall and reached Tsunhwa in the demilitarized area, chasing "Chinese residents who opposed the Japanese in southern Jehol." Many Japanese planes were assembled at the Malanyu Great Wall pass, these reports said.

Advices to the Rengo (Japanese) News Agency at Tokyo indicated the possibility of Japanese military action against alleged banditry in the demilitarized zone.

Following earlier reports that Japanese troops were moving southward on the Great Wall on an "anti-bandit expedition," the Rengo dispatches said Japanese military leaders were meeting at Tientsin to consider steps against several thousand Chinese irregulars.

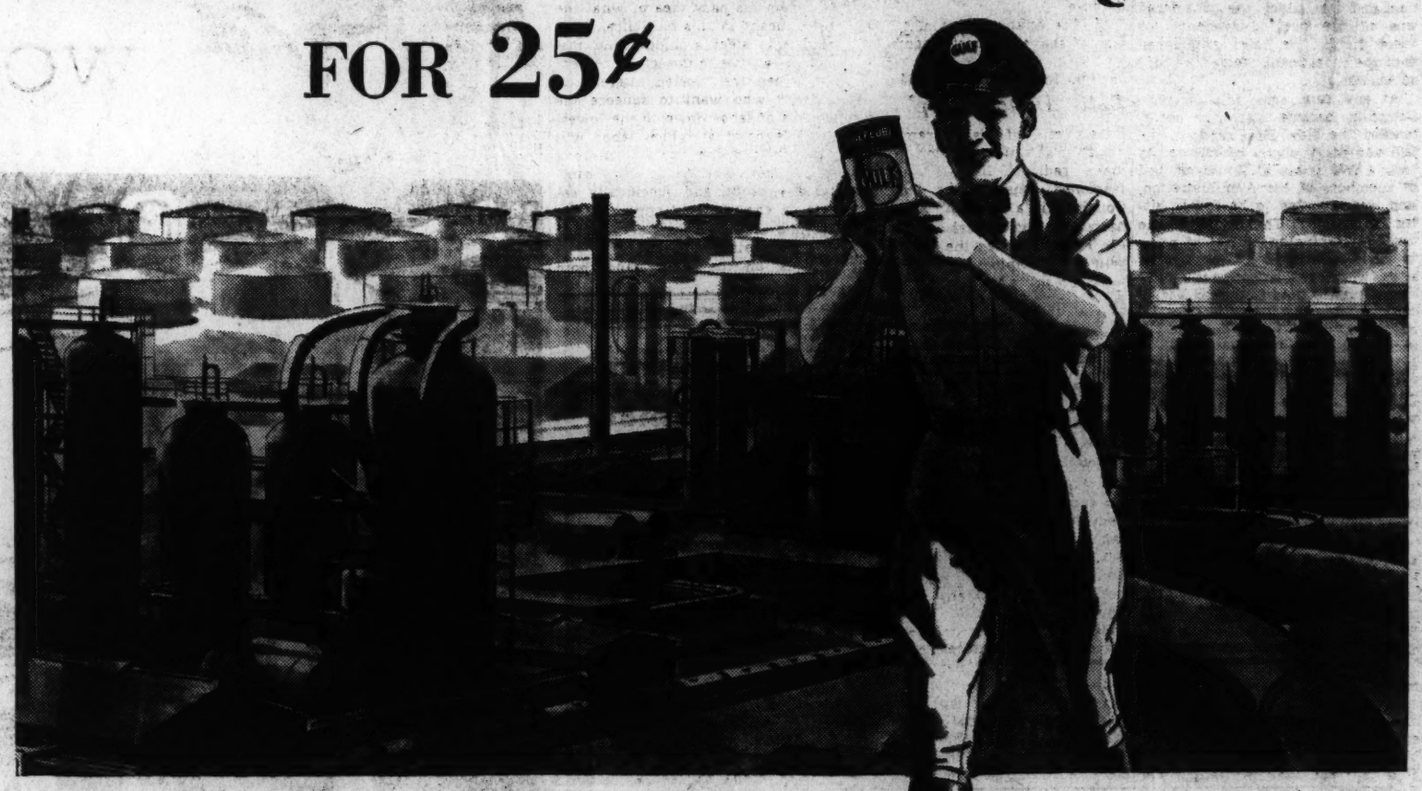
Out of Gulf's new Multi-sol process comes

A MOTOR OIL OF PREMIUM QUALITY FOR 25¢



THE NEW GULF-LUBE

A newly-discovered refining principle now puts premium qualities into a famous 25¢ oil

TODAY you can go into any Gulf station and buy more motor oil value for a quarter than ever before!

What has happened? Just this . . .

Gulf has built a giant refinery unit to utilize a new refining process.

It is called the Multi-sol Process—and gives Gulf-lube the qualities of a premium oil!

This process employs solvents of opposite action which act as chemical "policemen" in the oil. Silently, invisibly, these magic "policemen" separate the desirable from the undesirable parts of the oil. And when the "round-up" is finished, out from the giant tanks comes a pure lubricant—with all the "mischief-making" elements weeded out.

Today, no other 25¢ per quart motor oil in America is refined by this double-action solvent process.

Premium qualities without premium price

You know that premium oils have qualities that give you better performance. Think of getting these qualities without paying one cent extra! With the new Gulf-lube you get far better motor protection even during the longest, hottest summer runs. You get less wear on moving parts, less carbon, less sludge. You save the cost of many a repair and carbon-cleaning bill.

Use Gulf-lube, and you will add less oil between drains. For, thanks to the Multi-sol Process, Gulf-lube's already high mileage has been stepped up 20% to 25%!

Try the new Gulf-lube today—only 25c a quart at all Gulf dealers. Your car will know it's a premium oil—but your pocketbook won't!

GULF REFINING CO.

THIS BOTTLE of milk shows what the Multi-sol process does for Gulf-lube. It separates the "cream" from the "milk." Selective solvents settle the impurities in the oil to the bottom, and float the desirable parts to the top. This "cream" is then skimmed off. Gulf-lube is the only 25¢ oil made by this process.

DRIVE the new Gulf-lube farther before adding another quart of oil! Thanks to the Multi-sol process, its already high mileage has been stepped up 20% to 25%.

GULF

No other 25¢ oil gives you all these quality points!

1. It is Multi-sol processed.
2. Its already high mileage has been stepped up 20% to 25%.
3. Highly resistant to oxidation—non-sludging . . . extra long life.
4. It has a high viscosity index—thins out less under heat . . . easy starting year-round. Thoroughly de-waxed.
5. Forms far less carbon.
6. High film strength—a pure mineral oil that will not corrode new alloy bearings.

American Messiahs + By the Unofficial Observer

Author of "The New Dealers"

Installment IV—Microphone Messiah (Part 2)

tice," in which he quoted from the papal encyclicals, as well as from Jewish and Protestant creeds and writings. This speech cemented the New Deal-Catholic working alliance.

In return, Coughlin supported the New Deal loyally. In the Michigan banking crisis of February, 1933, which led up to the Nation-wide moratorium, he denounced the Detroit bankers unmercifully and urged their prosecution and conviction. His indignation was not allayed by the current rumor that the Detroit crisis was caused by an attempt of the New York bankers to catch Henry Ford's financial reserves and so get into his business. During 1933 and the early part of 1934 he was strong for the New Deal and coined the slogan of "Roosevelt or Ruin," which summarized the popular reaction of the time.

Then Coughlin's interests led him to take up money matters—on which the Great Encyclical was studiously vague—and he began advocating free silver, retirement of the national debt with non-intrest-bearing notes, and a central bank. As Roosevelt was chilly toward the silverites, Coughlin began to cool off but in November, 1933, when Al Smith was denouncing Roosevelt's "baloney dollar," Coughlin went to New York and broke the back of the "sound money" crowd and their captive balloon, Al, with his speech at the Hippodrome in support of Roosevelt's gold purchase policy. Coughlin drew 30,000 people while the "sound money" people's meeting on the same night failed to fill Carnegie Hall.

The real break between Coughlin and the New Deal came when Henry Morgenthau published the list of large holders of silver, bringing out the fact that the secretary of Coughlin's Radio League was carrying silver futures to the extent of 500,000 ounces. Coughlin, who had been advocating free silver, appeared to take it calmly and explained that he had consistently urged the purchase of commodities, that he favored an increase in the price level and the remonetization of silver, and that he expected the President to bring them about. He added that the silver bullion didn't belong to him but to his organization and that silver was considered one of the best investments for these funds. He later announced that the investment yielded a profit of $12,000.

At any rate, after this incident, Coughlin became distinctly cooler toward the New Deal, and, in the fall and early winter of 1934-35, he took a few pokes at Roosevelt and at members of his Administration, and was reported to be rather bitter in private. The next time he visited Washington he was at pains to have a talk with Huey Long, after which the Long people said that Coughlin had promised not to oppose Long in the presidential primaries of 1936 and had hinted that he might help him. As a result of the dawning realization of the New Dealers that a Long-Coughlin alliance was possible and would be embarrassing, Hugh Johnson felt impelled to deliver his blast at these two "Catilines," in the hope of driving a wedge between Coughlin and conservative Catholic opinion. To do this, Johnson charged that there was an alliance between the two men, when there was only a mild political flirtation. He was successful, in that he had the effect of driving Coughlin back—for the time being, at least—into the Roosevelt camp, much to Huey's disgust.

Coughlin's strength rests on far more than his sugary, sanctimonious voice and his gift for suave rhetoric. It rests on the doctrines of social justice advanced by the liberal Encyclicals of Leo XIII and Pius XI and on the support of Coughlin's superior, the liberal Bishop Gallagher, of Detroit. His eloquence is, therefore, only the vehicle for giving effect to a great organization's deliberate social policy.

He has taken the Papal Encyclicals very seriously and has not departed very far from their literal meaning. In fact, his personal familiarity with economic and social problems is, like his political philosophy, pretty much of a grab-bag affair. The trend of his speeches suggests that he was accidental, rather than intentional, in his discovery that his views on contemporary politics were popular. This forced him to talk much faster than he could learn the facts—on one occasion, the publishers of "The Economic Consequences of the New Deal," by Stolberg and Vinton, asserted that he had simply paraphrased whole passages of this document. He had no particular background in economics and it was probably pure chance that some of the money cranks got his ear at an early stage and sold him on their greenback and silver panaceas. The Encyclicals gave him no lead in this field and Coughlin fell for the idea that monetary manipulation was the best short cut to social justice. He concentrated on money—one of the few important questions of the age on which there has been little or no coherent thinking or doctrine through the course of the last ten centuries—and only began to branch out a little in 1934. Away from the Encyclicals, his thinking has so far been consistently foggy.

When he set out to organize his super lobby, the 5,000,000 members of his National Union for Social Justice, he based its 16 planks pretty squarely on the writings of Pius XI, and added a few monetary revelations of his own:

1. Liberty of conscience and education.

2. "A just and living annual wage," commensurate with American standards of decency, for every citizen willing and able to work.

3. Nationalization of banking credit and currency, power, light, oil and natural gas, and "our God-given natural resources."

4. Private ownership of all other property.

5. Control of privately-owned property for the public good.

6. Substitution of a government-owned Central Bank for the privately-owned Federal Reserve system.

7. Rescue of the right to coin and regulate the value of money from the "hands of private owners."

8. Maintenance by the Central Bank of the cost of living at an even keel and repayment of dollar debts with "equal value dollars."

9. Cost of production plus a "fair profit" for the farmer.

10. Government aid to labor in organizing.

11. Recall of all "non-productive" bonds.

12. Abolition of tax-exempt bonds.

13. "Broadening of the base of taxation founded upon the ownership of wealth and capacity to pay."

14. Simplification of government and further lifting of taxation from the laboring class.

15. Conscription of wealth as well as of men in case of a war of self-defense.

16. The establishment of "human rights" above "property rights."

Actions of Congress Belie 'Dictatorship'

As a result of this program and of Coughlin's National Union, a good many radicals, liberals and old-fashioned conservatives fear that Coughlin is a "Fascist" and there has arisen a good deal of discussion of "Fascism under the Cross" and religious discipline as a substitute for black shirts and Storm Troopers. In this connection, it is noteworthy that the principles of the N. U. S. J. are silent on the subject of free speech, freedom of the press and upholding the Constitution of the United States. Moreover, in an article written for Ray Moley's "Today," Coughlin was at pains to point out that the American form of government had been unbalanced by Roosevelt's assumption of vast powers and by the activity of the President and his appointees in "initiating laws."

"Call this democracy, if you will," Coughlin wrote, "but it is not the same kind of democracy which was conceived by Jefferson, Washington and Adams. To put it mildly, it is an evolutionized form of democratic government. Or, to express it harshly, it is a revolution which has silently gone on with little and negligible protest coming from the mass of American people."

The fact that Father Coughlin is not infallible in his interpretation of political developments was revealed by Congress going native in 1933, which resulted in relegating the notion that Roosevelt was a "dictator" to the ashcan of forgotten epithets. It is important only as showing Coughlin's trend of mind in the light of the Quadragesimo Anno's recommendation that, in government, "a graded hierarchical order exist between the various subsidiary organizations" and that the State be the arbiter of society "in kingly fashion." Coughlin has asserted on several occasions that if democracy, even in America, is weakening, it is largely because of the "decadence of capitalism." He has also said that what we have called "democracy" has really been "plutocracy." In his article for Today he wrote, "By no means do I subscribe to the opinion that, if capitalism is worn out beyond repair, we must then adopt communism, socialism, or even fascism. I simply mean that capitalism has become so identified with abuses which encumber it that its nature is merged with the abuses. Their removal means the burial of capitalism."

In its place, he foresees a "new system based on the belief that wealth is not money, but that wealth is created by the union of capital and labor, and that this wealth must be distributed, even through the intervention of the Government, in such a way that every laborer who co-operates in producing this wealth shall have that share of it which will enable him to enjoy, according to his merits, the things that we are capable of growing and of manufacturing as a nation."

This new, if rather vague, technique he calls "social justice," under a system in which private property is identified with a sense of "religious stewardship."

IV.

For reasons which will later become obvious, the important question in all this is the extent to which Coughlin's program corresponds with the views of the Vatican. Coughlin is not a clear-cut thinker. He gargles his ideas and is easily carried away by his own stream of oratory.

For example, Coughlin has created considerable apprehension by that plank in his platform which says "I believe not only in the right of the laboring man to organize in unions, but also in the duty of the Government which that laboring man supports to facilitate and to protect these organizations against the vested interests of wealth and intellect."

Does this mean the "corporative state" of Mussolini? And what are "vested interests of intellect?" Some liberals and radicals have been puzzled by that phrase. They ought to be, as the phrase is directed at them, as may be discovered in Quadragesimo Anno. Pope Pius XI specifically mentions the "error" of "the 'intellectuals,' as they are called, who set up in opposition * * * another equally false moral principle: That all products and profits, excepting those required to repair and replace invested capital, belong by every right to the workingman. * * * It is an alluring poison, consumed with avidity by many not deceived by open socialism." Apparently, Coughlin's plank set down his hazy idea of what the Pope meant in this encyclical. Pius desires to steer a middle and just course—a little to the left of center?—between the "vested interests of wealth" who want to squeeze the income of labor down to the lowest possible point at which labor will function and the "vested interests of intellect" who would deny capital any profit, and specifically refers to the two extremes as the "Unjust Claims of Capital" and the "Unjust Claims of Labor."

It is, on the other hand, both true and natural that the encyclical should say some pleasant things about the corporative state, forbidding strikes and lockouts by public authority, and leading to "peaceful collaboration of the classes, repression of Socialist organizations and efforts, the moderating influence of a special ministry." Yet the Pope expressed misgiving as to the "excessively bureaucratic and political character" of such a state and suggested that the sine qua non of any better social order was "the co-operation of all men of good will."

Church Is Inflexibly Against Communism

The natural tendency of the Church is Fascist—that is to say, it relies on the authoritarian principle, on discipline, doctrine administered through a hierarchy—and its policy is inflexibly anti-Communist. But that does not mean that the Church is Fascist, as Americans commonly misunderstand the meaning of the word. The doctrine is the thing—social justice according to a particular idea of what social justice should be—and the mechanism suggests itself once the goal is agreed upon. To obtain justice, the Pope recommends the socialization of certain types of property:

"For it is rightly contended that certain forms of property must be reserved to the State, since they carry with them an opportunity of domination too great to be left to private individuals without injury to the community at large."

This is Coughlin's justification for his demand that we nationalize banks, natural resources and so on.

The real weakness of Coughlin's position is the danger that he fail to realize that his importance is due to the Church which gave him the doctrines that he utters and whose organization not only trained him but provided him with a microphone. His financial and political success has given him an air of sanctified omniscience that sits uneasily on the stomachs of those who deal with him. In 1934, when he testified on the money question before a congressional committee, he drove some of the committee members and some of the public half mad, but his ecclesiastical position prevented them from giving vent to their feelings. On this occasion he gave the impression that he was speaking by divine inspiration on the subject of money, until the only appropriate expression after every question was "Gangway fo' de Lawd Gawd Jehovah!" Each question produced, not an answer, but a long speech and in the end he left the stand, having cast pearls of honeyed eloquence before congressional inflationists, but having only infected them with a desire to rush down a steep place into the sea. When he broadcasts, of course, he is well supplied with facts and figures, but his general line is pretty hazy.

The conservative wing of the Catholic Church is unduly alarmed over him. Liberal clerics of greater erudition than Coughlin probably have misgivings but they say that, after all, he is preaching the doctrine of the great liberal Encyclicals, which many of the Catholic bishops conspicuously ignore. The great liberal Catholic scholar, Mgr. John A. Ryan, also interprets the Encyclicals in American terms, much as Coughlin does, but with greater learning, tolerance and moderation. And it is probable that his efforts have far more effect on the social thinking of the New Deal than does the rabble-rousing method of the radio priest.

Anti-Semitic Charge Declared Far-Fetched.

Some people see an anti-Jewish tinge in Coughlin's attack on the international bankers. In his reply to Johnson, he mentioned Baruch, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the Warburgs and the Rothschilds, and some New York rabbis rose to accuse him of fomenting racial hatred. But in his speech he also mentioned the Morgans, so the anti-Semitic interpretation is still pretty far-fetched.

Of greater interest to his superiors is the fact that Coughlin commands a wide Protestant following, especially in the farm belt, in addition to his Catholic supporters. A good many of his planks appear in the platform of the Farmer-Labor Party—as they do in other liberal platforms—but his plank to give cost of production to the farmer fits in precisely with the radical farm groups, from Milo Reno's Farm Holiday crowd to the Farmer-Labor gang, and two or three of the Farmer-Labor leaders have openly mentioned Coughlin as the leading candidate for President on a third party ticket. As he was born in Canada—though of an American father—Coughlin is presumably ineligible for the Presidency under the Constitution, if the Constitution is going to count for anything in the future, and so far as is known, Coughlin's father did not bother to assert his American citizenship after his emigration to Canada and did not register young Charles E.'s birth with an American Consul.

Yet Coughlin's influence is bound to be a big factor in the next Presidential campaign. Anybody who comands so wide an audience and has millions of names on file is automatically a big political force. Long went to see him and others will follow Long. Who can say what thoughts are running through the radio priest's mind? So far he has shown no sign of wishing to leave the Church and, so long as he is in the Church, he will remain under the authority of Bishop Gallagher and through the bishop, of his superiors. His most recent statements, of course, have been denials of any intention to form a "third party."

Refuses to Commit Self to Third Party.

So far he has refused to commit himself or the N. U. S. J. to a third party program and has, instead, announced his desire to get results by bringing pressure to bear on Congress. Speaking at Detroit the same day that Huey Long offered to back Borah's choice (within limits) for the Presidency in 1936, Coughlin declared that "it is not our desire to form a political party, but it is our intention to drive out of public life the men who have promised us redress, who have preached to us the philosophy of social justice and, then, who have broken their promises to practice the philosophy of plutocracy."

While such a program of lobbying is calculated to assist Roosevelt, by relieving him of congressional reactionaries, Coughlin disavowed the idea of one-party government under "the dictatorship of a President," explaining that the members of the National Union "reject atheistic Communism. We disavow racial Hitlerism; we turn our backs upon industrial Fascism. We have no part with plutocratic individualism and less with immoral capitalism as we find it in the United States today." This does not make his position much clearer, but it does suggest that the hierarchy have definitely rejected the third party idea in favor of the traditional American institution of the lobby.

So long as Gallagher remains Bishop of Detroit, the present arrangement probably will be continued—whereby Coughlin has a pretty free voice so long as he does not try to project himself as a candidate for office or as the leader of a political party.

Evolution of the Milkman

THE market for milk is as wide as the world.

Migratory races took their herds with them on their travels.

Wherever man settled, the cow was made to feel at home.

As communities grew, the distance between the source of supply and the resident "demand" became greater and greater.

Consumers found it too difficult to go to the cows. So the cows were brought to their dwellings. This was the original doorstep delivery and the beginning of milk routes.

In Spain gaily caparisoned cows are familiar sights. They announce their business with the lively jingle of their bells.

They scale their abundance to the customer's order.

In other countries the cow is represented by perambulatory cans propelled through the streets by horse, donkey, dog and man power.

The point is to get milk from the source to the customer as dependably as the ingenuity of the milkman, whatever his race, creed, or color, can contrive.

Picturesqueness is a by-product.

In America the corporate milkman has made it his job to see that his perishable commodity is handled with all the care and dispatch implied by its vital importance.

The corporate milkman may be short on local color; but he is long on local responsibility.

Too Late To Compromise.

Efforts to secure prepayment of the bonus have already occupied an entirely disproportionate amount of the energies of this session of Congress. Both houses have devoted a great deal of time to consideration of the Patman bill and a variety of substitutes. They freely chose the most inflationary of the measures proposed. Now it is too late to shift to a less fantastic measure, merely because the prospects of over-riding a resolute and carefully reasoned veto are recognized as slim.

Proponents of the bonus have had more than full opportunity to present their case. Their strategy has been to fall into line behind those who would start the printing presses to meet Government obligations. Since that move will be vigorously repulsed by the veto message, the politicians sponsoring the bonus should have the grace to observe the spirit of the Constitution and accept the result which they deliberately invited. Further encroachment upon the time of Congress, when it is pressed for action on a series of important bills affecting the welfare of the entire populace, certainly could not be morally justified.

By publicly favoring the enactment of a new compromise bonus bill (no such measure that would meet the approval of both Congress and the President has yet been devised), Senator Robinson, the majority leader, has shown little appreciation of the heavy responsibilities still confronting Congress. The time for such compromises has passed. The bonus advocates had their chance to sponsor a reasonable measure that might have won the approval of an executive responsible to the nation as a whole. It is too late now to talk of new compromises which could only upset the whole legislative program.

Minister To Canada.

The nomination of Norman Armour as Minister to Canada is both a recognition of the importance of the Ottawa post and an encouragement to the many able career men in our diplomatic service. Although still well on the right side of 50, it is now close to a quarter of a century since Mr. Armour first became connected with the Department of State. During that period he has served with increasing distinction in nine foreign capitals. In his present post, as Minister to Haiti, he largely arranged the transition of that country from domination by American Marines to a complete independence compatible with the "good neighbor" policy of the United States.

Universally popular and respected, Mr. Armour's new appointment will do much to dissipate any lingering Canadian irritation at disclosures that our overzealous military authorities should have seriously contemplated conditions of hostility between this country and the neighboring Dominion. Reports from Canada that the appointment has been welcomed "with the highest approval" are proof of the wisdom of the choice. President Roosevelt is to be congratulated for this further step in removing the diplomatic service from politics, and in placing it under the merit system so essential to the successful handling of our international relations.

Fair Harvard.

Once again Harvard stands forth in proportions clearly revealing its full right to leadership among educational institutions of the country. The university has accepted the gift of a portrait of John Reed, ardent supporter of the Bolshevik revolution, who was graduated in the class of 1910. The painting has been hung in a dormitory standing on the site of the house in which he lived as a student. Nearby are framed the dour and patrician faces of Sam Adams and George Washington.

Pancho Villa made Reed a brigadier general in his guerrilla forces; later, the Russian Communists named him to the executive committee of the Third International. His body now lies outside the Kremlin walls near the tomb of Lenin in Moscow. A committee of alumni who ordered the painting wrote, in proffering it to Harvard as a memorial on the twenty-fifth anniversary of Reed's graduation, that his "qualities of courage, idealism and independent mind merit some recognition on the part of Harvard men."

In a day when legislators and wholesale druggists, among others, have been pricked on by narrow men and narrower pens to an unreasoning hysteria against anything even faintly tinging of revolutionary thought in halls of learning, many a lesser university might have quailed before such an offer. Yet Harvard gladly acquiesced, and thereby showed her magnitude of spirit. Only an institution firmly grounded in the deep rock of scholarship could have felt thus assured of its proper course. Only an institution freed of the hobbles of little minds and fearful hearts could have maintained this clear vision of the real American tradition. No conscript oaths, no doubts, no pettiness here—but fair Harvard, in very truth.

Work Relief Wages.

The schedule of relief wages announced by the President demonstrates that the vast work-relief undertaking is what it claims to be. Some of the major projects will be exempted from the "security wage" schedule. But for the most part this fund will be spent with the view of providing the greatest possible number of jobs.

In spite of the President's desire to facilitate the transfer of the unemployed from the relief rolls, no lavish distribution of the fund entrusted to his care seems to be in prospect. In conformity with the admirable formula he submitted to Congress in his last annual message, the wages proposed will be "larger than the amount now received as a relief dole, but at the same time not so large as to encourage the rejection of opportunities for private employment or the leaving of private employment to engage in Government work."

In these circumstances it is only proper that "at least 90 per cent" of those given employment under the program shall be taken from the public relief rolls. The purpose of the plan is not to employ a small fraction of the unemployed at "prevailing wages." Even the construction of new public improvements seems to be a secondary consideration. Obviously the important point in the President's mind is the greatest possible substitution of useful work relief for the demoralizing dole.

Already the President is being criticized. He will be accused of driving down wage scales in private industry, and of exploiting the unemployed for the public benefit. No doubt he has anticipated numerous complaints of this sort. But the course he has taken must be balanced against the alternatives. A policy of granting prevailing wages for made work would either bankrupt the Nation or fail to lighten the relief burden. Facing this fact squarely and courageously, the Administration has decided to proceed with a program under which the evils of the dole will be mitigated, with a minimum of strain upon the national credit.

Direct competition with private industry will likewise be avoided. Farmers will not be antagonized by having their employes quit to take better jobs provided by the Government, as they frequently did under the CWA. Businessmen will not be discouraged from extending their operations. For most of the work to be undertaken under the present schedule will not encroach upon their domain. If there had been any certainty that the work relief program would have been thus safeguarded against extravagance and disruption of private enterprise, it would have encountered much less opposition than it did.

Some of the complaints over classification of States and counties appear to be justified. But any conceivable system would be arbitrary in some aspects. Doubtless the Works Progress Division will make adjustments where it can be shown that the rates are discriminatory or socially undesirable. Completely adequate powers to prevent such abuses are vested in the Administration.

Mystics For The Chaco.

On a newspaper page bearing advertisements of sheer silk stockings and the newest in bridge tables appears a matter-of-fact announcement that some 15,000 persons now living in Saskatchewan propose to remove their entire company to Paraguay. They are the Dukhobors. Their reason for leaving Canada is that they do not find sufficient religious freedom under the law.

Not long ago this strange sect received some notice when its members paraded in the nude as a protest against Dominion authority. It is 35 years since they first came to Canada, the ragged and penniless remnants of a religious group expelled from Russia. Today they are reported to hold aggregate assets of more than $10,000,000. They have no stated places of ceremonies of worship, no holy days and no ordained ministry. They deny the divinity of Christ and give mystical interpretation to the Scriptures. Encouraged by the success of a group of Mennonites who migrated to the Chaco ten years ago, and who have found complete religious liberty under Paraguayan law, they plan to buy land far from the scene of the present hostilities, there to cultivate the fruits and vegetables which comprise their entire diet.

There is something curiously anachronistic in all this. Such things seem to belong to an earlier, less mechanistic century. It is all very well for a delegation of Minnesota families to move to the Matanuska Valley of Alaska with the aid of the Federal Rehabilitation Administration. They seek economic security in a world of depression and despair. But for 15,000 persons deliberately to turn away from the comforts of a well-established community life and plunge into the wilds of South America, all in the name of religious freedom, is as provocative a twentieth century fact as would be the reenactment of the Crusades.

Yet into the wilderness the Dukhobors are preparing to go. Paraguay guarantees them exemption from military service and freedom from taxation for ten years. There, like the early Puritans, they hope to find time and place to contemplate "the wonderful works of Almighty God." In a hundred years how will their history read? If strength of conviction counts for anything, the Dukhobors can not fail to make a sizable impress on the chosen portion of South America. But how strange that a peace-loving Russian-born people, conditioned by Canada, should at last find their home in a tropical jungle midst the Indians and expatriated Spaniards of war-crazed Paraguay.

Man And Dame Fashion.

Straw Hat Day has come and gone and the so-called "stronger sex" may now venture out into the open in lighter-than-air headgear with impunity. One day the streets are filled with somber felts and the next day Panamas, Leghorns and Harrows bloom forth with all the aplomb of gay and giddy debutantes. And all because man, who delights in believing that he transcends her dictates is, in reality, clay in the hands of Dame Fashion.

It has long been a clubby, masculine prerogative to twit the little woman on her servility to the whims of style. The lord of creation, in a coat cut exactly like those of his fellow men, in uncomfortable collars which he has worn unquestioningly since coming to man's estate, in trousers which scrape the ground or expose the ankle according to Bond street, sees no irony in his remarks about women being "just like a lot of sheep." Any attempted departure from the orthodox in men's clothes is regarded as fantastic heresy. Man, famed in verse and legend, as a "tower of strength" would no more venture on the street in a suit of hyacinth blue than he would try to conquer the world single-handed. To both challenges, he would probably fall back on the old reliable subterfuge that discretion is the better part of valor.

Women are eternally on the search for that which is new and novel in wearing apparel. They like to be the first to wear an odd shade or a trial fabric, whereas men continue to stick to familiar weaves and custom-tested patterns. Women recognize no sartorial limitations except those of the pocketbook. Men, on the other hand, must even need wait for a set day on which to change from felts to straws. Comparisons being odious, it would appear that the phrase would be much more apt if it were changed to "just like a lot of rams."

A Buckled Yardstick.

The first official audit of the books of the TVA makes it evident that this ambitious Government project can not be employed as a reliable yardstick by which to measure the efficiency of privately owned utilities. The TVA authorities will doubtless be able to defend themselves against imputations of fraudulent practice, despite irregularities in accounting methods and alleged illegalities of various sorts. Nevertheless, the public can not be expected to attach much importance to cost estimates that, according to the Comptroller, are on the one hand swollen by inclusion of outlays regarded as excessive or irrelevant and, on the other hand, arbitrarily held down by inadequate allowance for depreciation of plant and equipment.

Some of the doubtful expenditures may, as the head of TVA asserts, be thoroughly justified in the opinion of engineers. But other items would certainly be regarded as "padding," if they were included in the cost estimates of private enterprises. Furthermore, it is hard to see how the engineers can satisfactorily meet the criticism that the current allowance for depreciation is less than one-tenth what it should be, even on a conservative basis, "despite the apparently excessive depreciated value at which the Muscle Shoals property was taken up on the books."

Unless it is generously assumed that the included items which the Comptroller disapproves constitute an offset to the inadequate allowances on capital account, it looks as if the so-called fair yardstick will be utterly worthless as a measurement of the service rendered by private utilities. The TVA will certainly be a discredited basis for comparison if the engineers and the auditors for the Comptroller General can not reach any agreement concerning the items that should enter into cost computations.

Time was when we would have got ever so peeved if anybody had referred to us as a "missing link," but now, with reference to chain letters, we deem the term an honor.

And when you bury the hatchet with an enemy, what are you supposed to do when he calls around next day with an ax to grind?

The temper of the people has become such that they don't much care what happens if it will only hurry up and do it.

Buying Power.

From the Magazine of Wall Street.

It is high time this country got one thing straight: Fundamentally, purchasing power is the result of hard work; no man, or body of men, can create purchasing power without working for it. The following is a quotation from the opinion read by Justice McReynolds of the minority in the recent "gold-clause" cases: "Under the challenged statutes it is said that the United States has realized profits amounting to $2,800,000,000, but this assumes that gain may be generated by legislative fiat. To such counterfeit profit there would be no limit; with each new debasement of the dollar they would expand. Two billions might be ballooned indefinitely—to 20, 30, or what you will."

This affords a clew perhaps to the reason for the failure, or at any rate non-success, of the Government's spending schemes. For example, the benefits which have been distributed to farmers over the last year are largely counterfeit purchasing power. That part of the benefits that came into being as a result of the monetary devaluation certainly is, while that part of them that came from general taxation was merely lifted from the pockets of the non-farmers. The true purchasing power of the farmer is to be found in cotton, wheat and hogs; the true purchasing power of the industrialist in buildings, machines and clothing.

How can any government, which is essentially a parasitic organism, for it produces none of these things, only consumes them, enhance by edict the country's true purchasing power even as much as one iota?

Burke And Telegrams.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In connection with the present trend toward "Government by telegram" I desire to submit some words of wisdom from a statesman of the past, Edmund Burke. In 1774, when the troubles with America were thickening, Bristol, the trading center of the west of England, honored Burke by electing him as its representative in Parliament.

At the conclusion of the poll his colleague had promised obedience to the instructions of his constituents. Burke, however, with unexampled boldness, declared his independence:

"Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment, and he betrays instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

"Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion, high respect; their business, unremitting attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs, and, above all, ever, and in all cases to prefer their interest to his own. But his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living." MAURY H. BROWN.

Hyattsville, Md., May 20.

Happy Tory.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of course I'll be called an old Tory, but now that apple trees are blooming, robins examining old lilac and song sparrows nesting in ancient vine; now that daffodils are blooming on hillside, red leaf-bud of maple and fragile loveliness of shadbush rejuvenating the old swamp, I can't help rejoicing that the Great Protector failed in his attempts to alleviate the hard lot of my ancestors by transplanting them in Jamaica.

Every kind of privilege was offered to them when orders in council to compel voluntary compliance failed. Was not New England climate harsh and the soil poor? he asked. Was not life there a constant struggle? Would any but a stiff-necked people stick around in a place like that when they could get free transportation to Jamaica, "a haven for th blest?"

And yet they stuck, God bless 'em, though at that time suffering was severe, commodities scarce and prices high.

Many seasons have made green or white the old burial lots that hold their dust. The climate still is harsh at times and the soil poor in spots. Yet generation after generation have found sustenance there. Sons and daughters who moved on pioneered on their own responsibility, as their parents pioneered. ELIZABETH EMMETT.

Peace Dale, R. I., May 7.

Aftermath.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The people of Washington should join with Mr. Cotton in his plea that the Federal bureaucracy right the wrongs it did to our banker, Col. Wade Cooper. The colonel ran sound banking institutions and if he had been given half a chance he could have reopened his banks and paid every cent demanded. The Federal octopus, in its moment of madness, wanted to turn his banks over to some nonbanking bureaucrats and because he resisted, his very character was assailed through trumped-up technicalities.

As Mr. Cotton says, time has vindicated Col. Cooper; but the smug Federal octopus never grows sorry nor apologetic. The colonel was not the only grand old American ruined by the March madness but he stands as a symbol of wronged American gentlemen.

It is never too late to make amends, so I hope that the fair-minded people of Washington will get together in some kind of a testimonial to the integrity and nobility of our fellow citizen. It is too much to expect a Federal octopus to apologize; but we can at least force it to see that honorable Americans everywhere denounce arbitrary assaults upon character and integrity.

WARREN R. MELFORS.

Washington, April 30.

Lincoln's Ear.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In June, 1848, a certain member of Congress declared: "Were I President, I should desire the legislation of the country to rest with Congress, uninfluenced by the Executive in its origin or progress, and undisturbed by the veto, unless in very special and clear cases." Then, quoting Thomas Jefferson, he said: "It is chiefly for cases where Congress is clearly misled by error, ambition, or interest, that the Constitution has placed a check in the negative of the President."

In August, 1859, the same man said: "The people of the United States are the rightful masters of both Congresses and courts, not to overthrow the Constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert the Constitution." That man signed his name "Abraham Lincoln." He kept his ear to the ground to learn what the American people wanted to do, instead of keeping his nose to a microphone telling the American people where to get off, and where the soup line begins.

HERB E. SHARP.

Washington, May 18.

Valid Point.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On the south side of Pennsylvania avenue in front of the White House, the Shriners are building a grandstand that covers not only every inch of the sidewalk but about 5 feet of the street as well.

I think it is an outrage that thousands of persons, residents and visitors, should be inconvenienced and endangered every day for a month by being forced to walk in the center of the street without even the protection of a temporary railing, in order that a private enterprise may profit by the sale of seats.

Why are Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey not permitted to use Lafayette Park as a circus location? It looks like discrimination in favor of the Shriners.

Business Man's Faith.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently I went to Washington especially to visit the Lincoln Shrine. At a time like this, it is nice to stand bareheaded before the figure of a man who, by birth and mode of life, was so well able to keep his gnarled hands upon a people's pulse.

While there I saw a mother, plainly dressed, teaching a small daughter to memorize the inscription above Lincoln's head. As a small business man I have not worried about the New Deal since.

Booing Students.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The report of the student fist fight here at the University of Virginia is correct in most of the facts, but there are several other facts that I should like to bring to your attention. The meeting did have to be adjourned from Cabell Hall but was continued at Jefferson Hall where there was no more trouble.

The fight which occurred in Cabell Hall was limited to a very small group. It was started when a persistent group of students who were booing the speaker were attacked by another group who were there because of their interest in the subject being presented. The fight was not one provoked by political views but merely because a small group was attempting to keep the speaker from making himself heard. It might be added that the sentiment against the boorers was very strong and that they who were making the noise were only a very small part of the audience.

Absolving the B. & O.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A. J. Shane, Beltsville, Md., in his letter, "Railroads' Responsibility," refers to the deplorable accident at Rockville to point out how the B. & O. immediately absolved itself of any blame with the terrible tragedy. Investigation absolved the B. & O. because the safety alarms were operating properly and the crew of the locomotive attended its duty down to the last foot.

I don't think the railroads are at fault because they own the track and trains. The public owns the highways and in many States tax the life out of the railroads to build and keep up the highways and operate the schools. Still the railroads don't demand that the counties and adjoining property owners keep up their maintenance.

Railroads are pioneers in over and under passes and if they had the means they would eliminate them all. OSCAR J. RASH.

President's Haste.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President appears rather hasty in flinging the "short and ugly word" at his critics; in view of wholesale repudiation of his campaign pledges.

We venture to assert there were not 50 real dirt farmers in the "gimme" crowd that assembled at the White House.

Inflation Is Inflation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of May 18, page one, column one, under section headed "Thomas Bill Pending" is found: "Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, chief advocate of inflation in Congress . . ."

Does Senator Thomas in fact advocate inflation with all the possible meanings the word may have or is this a conclusion of The Post editorial staff? Merely because The Post editorial staff wishes to think that certain measures are inflationary (even in a narrow sense) does not in fact make them so. Others may have a different and more reliable opinion.

"The Root of All Evil"

Post Office, Wednesday.

HOW much weekly pocket-money do you give your boy of 13? And how much ought you to give him?

England is stirred to its sturdy soul by the question of allowances for lads in their early teens. School teachers are debating it. Sociologists are putting in their "good word." A popular playwright says too many of such lads are getting more than a shilling, and he implies that twopence is plenty. A so-called family-expert thinks anything is too much.

A boy of 13 himself started the trouble. The son of a laborer, he was arrested on the charge of "pilfering" cigarettes from a slot-machine. His mother, appearing as a witness, let slip the terrific truth:

"In reply to a question of the chairman, she informed the bench that the boy had a weekly allowance of two shillings as pocket-money."

Such extravagance shocked Mr. St. John Ervine more than any of Mr. St. John Ervine's plays—"John Ferguson," for instance, or "The First Mrs. Frazer"—ever shocked the British public. He wrote straightway to the London Times about it.

Though he began with admirable repression ("The amount of the boy's pocket-money was, I thought, unusual"), his emotions soon overcame him. The sum, said he, "was certainly large in comparison with the sum I was allowed when I was thirteen. A working-class child of any age, forty years ago, seldom received more that twopence a week.

"Curiosity caused me to mention the matter to a friend who is headmaster of a secondary school almost exclusively attended by working-class or lower middle-class children, and I suggested to him that he should invite his pupils to write essays on the amount of their pocket-money and the manner in which it was spent."

And how awful were the revelations of luxury!

"It appears from these essays that 30 per cent of the pupils, whose ages range from 12 to 16, are given more than one shilling a week; . . . 36 per cent are given between sixpence and a shilling . . . The money is spent on sweets, visits to the cinema, savings, books, expenses in going away with sports-teams and on various hobbies."

Those essays prompted other educators to action. They began to inveigle their pupils into budget-betrayals. One well-known teacher typically reported:

"The school from which these results are drawn is a selective central school (children 11-16) in a poor industrial area in the eastern suburbs of London—i. e., a definitely working-class area.

"Over 2 shillings per week, 21 per cent; between 1 and 2, 44 per cent; between 6d and 1 shilling, 24 per cent; under 6d per week, 11 per cent."

And this lady is distressed. "While approving the increasing prosperity of the working classes"—yes, she really does approve of that!—"most of us," says she, "disapprove, I think, of the increased allowances, as most of it is just wasted. It certainly," she insists, "makes for great dissatisfaction."

Dissatisfaction among the teachers? Probably. But this teacher means among the recipients of the allowances.

"The more pocket-money," says she, "the greater the number of visits to the cinema among the lower classes."

And what would you expect Mrs. Stopes to do about this crying evil—Dr. Stopes, author of "Radiant Motherhood," and president of the Society for Constructive Birth-Control. My son, who is just 11, pocket-money. She, in her turn, writes to the Thunderer:

"The prevalence of regular pocket-money is, in my opinion, one of the keys to the lack of adult responsibility about money which is widely deplored. Few parents, however, realize it and think they are being kind to their children when they give them a little money to spend as regular pocket-money. They are not being kind; they are wasting one of the most valuable assets they could enlist on the side of independence of character.

"I have never given, and never will give, pocket-money in my nursery. My son, who is just 11, has earned everything he has spent, with the exception of a few money-gifts on recognized occasions, such as birthdays. At the age of 4, interested in household-wages book, he asked for a wage-book of his own and began to earn money, entering it up in the wages-book and signing for it. Looking back in that little record, one finds items such as this: To cleaning white paint in drawing room, 2d.; to laying turf straight in garden, 4d.; to chopping wood, 2d.; to felling a tree, 6d."

Need for a Tom Walsh

IF THE Republicans had a Tom Walsh, there is a strong suspicion hereabouts that they could develop something closely resembling a Teapot Dome scandal out of the great Tennessee Valley experiment. Not having one, or anyone approaching his investigating ability or tenacity of purpose, the audit of the experiment just completed by Comptroller General McCarl will likely pass relatively unnoticed. The chief concern about it, in fact, comes from a Democrat—Representative Andrew J. May, of Kentucky.

It has received very little attention in the press, largely because it is most difficult for a reporter to understand. There is no one available to dramatize it, yet in dramatization material it seems to abound.

Notwithstanding that the audit charges the valuation of the property was at the outset written down from around $133,000,000 to $51,000,000, that there had been overpayment of salaries, junketing on the part of officials, unauthorized contracts, the only outcome, if any, will probably be a move on the part of the Administration to change our auditing system.

This is apparently what Dr. A. E. Morgan, head of the authority, thinks should be done. At least, he contends the findings are the fault of the auditor and not the great experiment which he is conducting.

• • • •

If pressed in the matter, the Democrats will undoubtedly contend that Comptroller General McCarl is against the New Deal. They will probably put out the word that he is a Republican presidential candidate, conveniently forgetting that for 12 years he harassed the Republicans just as he is now a thorn in the flesh of the New Dealers.

It strikes me, however, that those of us outside the game of politics should not permit our judgment to be influenced by extraneous matters. We are confronted, it seems, with a choice of revising either our auditing system or the great experiment.

Manifestly we can't reconcile the two as they now stand. In the first place, the audit charges the law required the authority to maintain its principal office in the "immediate vicinity of Muscle Shoals." Offices and quarters were acquired there, according to the audit at a considerable expense. But the board and general offices have been set up in Knoxville, Tenn., a pleasant place in which to live, these quarters costing $36,000 a year in rental.

• • • •

In one instance, according to the audit, a cost-plus contract was entered into with a prominent construction firm for work not to cost more than $615,000 and for which that firm was to receive not more than $48,600. With the work one-sixth done it had already received $89,586.22. On another cost-plus project, Department of Agriculture employes were used and although their services were contributed by the Government they were figured in the total cost on which the contracting firm received 8 per cent.

A prominent Washingtonian was listed as being paid $5,000 of a $10,000 salary for "attorney in charge" although he was on the payroll of the Department of Justice. Salary overpayments for members of the board are indicated. The audit was for the fiscal year ended June, 1934. At that time the Authority had lost $62,910.17 notwithstanding that no charges for depreciation and overhead were considered.

The audit criticizes the Authority's method of establishing a depreciation reserve but says that even under this method the establishment of a most conservative reserve will necessitate gross revenue ten times greater than those at present.

• • • •

Obviously we are up against something here. It is not likely we can throw our famous "yard stick" overboard. But we must do something to keep its face straight. Changing of the auditing system would seem to be the only way out. And in changing it we must get a flexible system that will fit the experiments we undertake.

And The Rains Fell

After Two Years Of Drought, Indomitable Farmers Of Midwest See Torrents Sluicing Through Their Fields Rewarding Their Long-Suffering Patience And Hardihood.

By Hilding Siversen.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Dodge City, Kans.

RAIN has come to western Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska, eastern Colorado and the Texas Panhandle! After two years and more of drought, when pathetic buffalo-sod farmers peered into the blaze of each day's horizon, into dry, shimmering heat, and planted wheat seed in hope, to see it lie unsprouted in its bed of dry, drifting soil; after dust-choked cattle had shrunk into rackabone walking carcasses, to moan and die on the close-gnawed sod, with swollen black tongues—heavy rains have come!

Creeks and draws have jubilantly run full. The heavens opened and a 6-inch sod-soaker and gully-washer struck Scott County, filling its big artificial lake so that water sloshed over the dam. Low places became sloughs with singing, rippling waves and cattle waded luxuriantly in the ponds. A long, soaking drench passed slowly over the high plains and the thirsty soil drank it up. Redwing blackbirds appeared among the long grasses of the swales and frogs miraculously came to life, to croak as unconcernedly as though they had always been comfortable.

At Guymon, Okla., a devoted preacher had prayed for rain steadily and with such eloquence that he had taken laryngitis, whereat the members of his church took up the refrain, and now he is certain that their prayers are answered.

The dry-land farmers came out of their houses and stood in the rain with upturned faces, letting it soak their ragged shirts and overalls, giving thanks for the merciful moisture.

A SCHOOLHOUSE in one of the western Kansas county seat towns had been closed to children because of the dust storms and turned into a hospital for victims of dust pneumonia. But now the almost continuous hurricane of dust has ceased and the unconquerable buffalo grass is springing to life with promise of fatness and prosperity.

The courage of the people of the high prairies is almost incredible. Their recuperative power when disaster is past is still more incredible. It is a reflection of the resilience of nature itself.

One year the prairie lies desolate, gray, sun-scourged, desiccated, and the land seems to be a complete desert.

Then, if good rains come, there is a transformation. In some miraculous way the seed of vegetation is preserved, and the roots of grasses which seem to have disappeared are revived. The prairie then bursts into a profusion of bloom that seems impossible. At such times I have seen 50-acre tracts of prairie covered with a complete mat of brilliant wild flowers and the buffalo grass is lush and brilliant green. The winter wheat grows with extreme rapidity and the cattle wax fat if turned upon it in its earlier stages.

• • • •

LAST fall I stopped in one of the western Kansas towns that was especially hard hit by the drought. Even most of the weeds had been killed by the torturing sun. One of the most noxious of the weeds of the high plains is the Russian thistle, known more commonly as the tumble weed, but the farmers were treasuring every bit of the brown, prickly, scraggly thistles they could scrape together, as the cattle will eat them when all else fails.

I talked with several farmers and townsmen and asked them how they were getting on. "Oh, we're making it all right," they said, smilingly. "We didn't raise anything this year, but next year we'll surely get rain and there'll be good crops, and then we'll all forget that there ever was a drought." Their chins were up. Not one would admit defeat. What men they are! They are a superbreed.

The AAA benefits and Federal relief had kept many of them going. It is not hard to understand why these projects were popular as emergency measures, especially since 1935 started out as another year of cataclysmic drought.

It was the unshakable faith of the people themselves, however, that pulled them through what would seem to Easterners to be an impossible existence. They have unlimited reserves of optimism and courage. Fundamentally they are the strongest individualists in the United States and were never known to take a beating lying down.

• • • •

THEY scorn the idea of abandoning this country. Some of the far western Kansas counties raised more than 1,000,000 bushels of wheat in the good years. "And the good years will come again," they all say in concert.

What will the people of this semi-arid country do for themselves the remainder of this year, if rains continue and conditions are fairly favorable? There is practically no winter wheat, which usually is the mainstay of the high prairie.

The answer is simple, provided money is available for seed. They can still plant corn and perhaps sow some oats and barley. But the greatest crop of all is what is generally known as "feed." That includes kaffir corn, milo maize, feterita, brown dourrha, cane and other sorghums. These crops are hardy and grow with astonishing profusion with half a chance. They make fodder and silage that is even better than that of corn, and their tops make good grain rations for hogs, cattle and poultry.

A western Kansas farmer told me of a great hailstorm that once came in the first week in August, mowing down every living thing. The farmers planted "feed" even that late, and reaped excellent harvests that fall. And now there is June and July to boot. With a fairly good season from now on the semiarid regions will produce enormous crops of forage and grain.

• • • •

THE idea that so much dust has been blown out of this area that it is ruined for further planting is entirely erroneous, according to Gov. Landon and others who have kept in close touch with conditions. The soil of the flat prairies has suffered practically no water erosion and is deep and fertile, the black soil sometimes extending 2 or more feet down. The drifted dust looks bad, but a drift 3 or 4 feet deep covering a comparatively small area about a house or barn may have come from several square miles of territory, removing possibly an inch in places.

The people in this part of the country haven't the faintest idea of abandoning it. For one thing, large parts of western Kansas and Oklahoma and eastern Colorado and the Texas Panhandle have an oil and gas boom, with derricks springing up on the wild sod in a far-flung area. "There's always something—if it isn't one thing, it's another," as an old settler remarked.

One swallow doesn't make a summer and the two or three good rains that have come won't positively insure a good crop. But there are indications that the drought cycle has run its course and the remainder of the year and following years are likely to be more like those of previous cycles of abundance.

If the remainder of the season is reasonably favorable, you of the Eastern States who travel through this high prairie country next fall will be astounded. You will see the miracle of a valiant people and a marvelously resilient nature recovering from a disaster. The hideous nightmare of the drought will be forgotten.

A Glowing Short Story

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

HERE is a tiny book that can be carried in the pocket, yet it contains the most important truths ever uttered, and the most beautiful prose the world has ever seen.

It is called "The Complete Sayings of Jesus: A Glowing Short Story."

The compiler, Arthur Hinds, has taken the Authorized, or King James, version of the New Testament, has disengaged from it only the speeches and conversations and remarks of Our Lord, and arranged them in chronological order. So that in this thin volumn we have every word that Jesus spoke, as recorded in the Gospels, and nothing else, except where a note is necessary to explain the context, with reference to the time or the place or the accompanying circumstances.

The words are the identical words of the King James version, given without any interpolations.

This is the first time that these words have been given in separate form.

• • • •

It is remarkable, considering their prodigious influence, that the entire sayings of Jesus can easily be read within the space of three hours. And here they are assembled and arranged in sequence.

The purpose of the compiler is thus expressed: "To enable any reader, whether confirmed Christian or inquiring Pagan, or a frankly detached, to get him a book of Christ's own words. . . . Many a reader arrived at finis in the New Testament itself, has but a hazy picture of Christ on his daily walks as a circuit preacher everywhere within walking distance. . . . Christ's sayings complete . . . lifted out of context alien to the present purpose, may prove to be a glowing story, new not only to the non-reader but new even to the whilom New Testament readers who have not as yet discerned the 'continuities.'" No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

Plain Peeved.

I HATE to be stung. There was that time some months back when I picked up Elizabeth Jenkin's mystery novel, "Harriet"—now accountable winner of the Femina prize—and found my expectancy flattened into chagrin over something dull and tawdry.

And now says a jacket-blurb: "'Satan Was A Man' goes even deeper than 'Harriet' into the infinitely curious mental and emotional processes that lead to murder . . . masterly psychological novel . . . the final quintessence of horror . . . making or sleeping, it will haunt you for days." Edward Hale Bierstadt's "Satan Was A Man" (Doubleday Doran, $2) is haunting me all right—with a bad taste in the mouth.

It is the story of Carroll Lindsey, 40-ish yet still dependent on a rich, doting, and dipsomaniac mother. He collects books on Crime, sits upstairs in the gloomy house and writes of murder. There is a waitress he desires; she, in turn, has her eye on a $100,000 legacy hanging over him. But he does little more for a while than boil down farther and farther his hatred for his mother. And the book tells how he comes to murder her.

• • • •

NOW Mr. Bierstadt brings in the rather neat subsidiary device of placing a butler in the house who is, in reality, a professor of criminal psychology on his sabbatical. Simeon Gaunt takes the Lindsey case as a living laboratory experiment. He is fairly wise, though at the same time as sententious as the "heavy" in a road-show melodrama. When the climax comes, he literally acts as the deus ex machina. But that orderly frame around the story does not compensate us much for a main theme which strikes me as sheer theatricality in matter, as deadwood in manner.

For instance, I get a plain peeve over this sort of thing. Carroll, his sister and the family doctor (the sister's finance) are sitting in the parlor having tea. Two sentences tell us that the light has gone out in the spirit lamp—thus leading ever so deftly to the topic of alcohol. Then Dr. Hoyt makes some little speeches defining ethyl from methyl. "What's the lethal dose?" asks Carroll, reflectively. When a page and a half of information makes it plain that poisonous alcohol can't be told from nonpoisonous by taste or smell, he strolls to the door. "Makes you think, he says, "of the Japanese wrestlers, doesn't it? . . . With the right kind of hold you can make the other fellow throw himself."

"What the dickens do you suppose he meant by that last crack, Dot?" exclaims Dr. Hoyt.

"I really don't know," she says.

In the interests of literary craftsmanship a book which is "the quintessence of horror" might well come out of the kindergarten.

• • • •

MR. BIERSTADT'S more clever readers must have guessed that something like homicide is intended. And so, dear ones, it is. But when Carroll feels that ol' debbil murder coming on, it seems that first of all he has to have a nightmare. The peculiar form of these, all duly narrated, leads me to think that Mr. Bierstadt has become at bit self-conscious over his own famous collection of criminological lore.

For when Carroll wrings the neck off his mother's canary—the "symbol," you see—he is in the midst of a dream in which he thinks he is Lizzie Borden giving her mother and father, 40 and 41, whacks respectively with the ax. When, after giving his mother a methyl highball, he walks in a trance and carves the corpse with a razor, he dreams the whole story of Jack-the-Ripper. And when his hatred for the waitress, now his wife, comes to a head, he goes in a nightmare through the action of the Crippen case and then kills his wife with an overdose of reducing powder.

Have I made it clear enough that for all the gore here one senses only a dreadfully mechanical flatness? That the shivers one feels are cousin only to the shivers of embarrassment one had in the back when vaudeville performers, in order to get a hand at the end of their act, waved an American flag around the stage? That, in short, "Satan Was A Man" is hokum?

If, not, a very guarded peek at the book will convince you. Then we could shake hands on the peeve.

Promises Fail To Cut Expense For California

Legislature Kills Plans to Consolidate Counties, Save on Roads.

By the United Press.

Sacramento, Calif.—Despite campaign pledges of State officials and legislative candidates to effect all possible economies in government, practically nothing has been accomplished by the Legislature to effect savings, a survey has revealed.

In discussion of economy before the session, officials and legislators admitted that consolidation of governmental functions was the most logical way to reduce expenses. They pointed out duplication of effort in State departments and particularly in county and city government. They agreed that mounting governmental costs could be slowed down, if not halted, by consolidating bureaus, offices and counties.

Yet, every attempt in that legislature to eliminate overlapping functions has been swamped by opposition, largely of a political nature, according to persons who believe in economizing even at the cost of jobs.

Senate Kills Saving.

Gov. Merriam, in proposing to place all county roads in the State highway system and thereby eliminate county road taxes, said:

"They're crying for economy and consolidation. Here's a chance for them to show whether they mean it."

The proposal drew storms of protest and was believed killed when the Senate refused to bring it to the floor for consideration.

Assemblymen and Senators objected strenuously to bills designed to permit consolidation of counties. Nothing was done toward eliminating State bureaus or commissions. The Governor announced he planned to save some $500,000 in salaries by a readjustment, but disclosed no details of his plan. Legislative attempts to lower the maximum of certain salaries were defeated on the ground that good officials required "decent" pay.

Assemblyman Thomas J. Cunningham, young member of the House and an advocate of governmental consolidation, believes simplification provides an easy approach to the problem. He has pointed out that despite heavily increased expenses, the legislative cry has been for more taxes, more revenue, rather than economy in government.

County Mergers Urged.

"No substantial relief to taxpayers can be had until legislation is enacted to permit the modernization of California's topheavy system of local government," he said.

Modern transportation facilities, in Cunningham's opinion, have eliminated the old necessity for small units of government.

"There are nine county seats within one and one-half hours' drive of Sacramento," he pointed out. "The county seats of Yuba and Sutter are separated only by the Feather River. San Bernardino County is as large as Mono, Alpine, Calaveras, Amador, Mariposa, Tuolumne, El Dorado, Placer, Sierra and Nevada Counties combined, and has nearly twice the population of those ten counties.

"As one example of possible savings, if the ten counties were served by two circuit judges instead of by ten resident judges, the State alone would save $64,000 biennially in judges' salaries."

Opposition to county consolidation is so strong, however, that no legislator expected economy in that direction.

Indians to Obtain Credit for Farms

New Act Will Enable Them to Better Their Lot.

By the United Press.

Carson City.—A fund of $10,000,000 to be established under the Indian reorganization act to permit credit facilities to enable Indians to improve their situation may be available to Nevada tribesmen, Indian Bureau officials have predicted.

Under the act, Indians will be able to borrow money to purchase equipment for their farms and to establish simple rural industries.

"Lack of capital in the past has prevented the Indians from developing cooperative and rural enterprises," Indian Commissioner John Collier declared.

"They have been unable, with few exceptions, to obtain loans from regular credit funds. Credit extended to Indians by the Federal Government in the past has averaged through successive years less than $1.60 per capita."

Collier admitted it will be necessary to train the Indians in the use of money and with a sense of obligation to repay any loans. He declared previous allotments of funds to Indians had been dissipated by them because of their lack of thrift.

Should the tribes be ineligible for loans from the revolving credit fund, officials believe that money will be supplied from other sources to continue the "Industry Among Indians" program.

Also, the Government intends to create revolving credit funds among the Indian tribes through conversion of such tribal income as may be realized on the reservations.

"In the future, tribal income from the sale of tribal assets will preferably be converted to credit use for productive instruments," Collier declared, "rather than be paid out to tribal members in cash for current needs."

Courageous Miss! She Broke 10 Chains

By the Associated Press.

Leonardtown, Md., May 21.—A pig with two mouths meant, among other things, 10 dime chain letters to Miss Hope Swann, of Tudor Hall farm in St. Mary's County.

The pig lived only three days, but newspapers chronicled its short life and named Miss Swann as its owner. The chain letters, none containing dimes, came to Tudor Hall with a mass of other mail.

The other letters asked about the pig, what it was fed and details as to its freakish make-up. Those letters were answered but Miss Swann said she consigned the dime letters to the waste-basket.

Farmers Urged To Cast Ballots In Wheat Poll

Fairfax to Vote Saturday on Future of Crop-Control Program.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

Every farmer in Fairfax County Va., who grew wheat between the years 1928 and 1932 is being urged to cast his ballot in the wheat referendum in the county next Saturday.

County Agricultural Agent H. B. Derr, cooperating with the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is anxious to obtain an expression whether farmers favor the present wheat control program during the period of 1936 to 1939 inclusive.

There are 2,000 farms in Fairfax County and each farmer who grew wheat between 1928 and 1932 is entitled to vote, even if he did not sign a contract. Farmers will be asked, "are you in favor of a wheat production program, to follow the present one, which expires with the 1935 crop year?"

Polling places will be open in four communities, Derr has announced, with members of the several community committees acting as election officials. Voting will be from 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.

The polling places are: Centreville elementary school, Floris elementary school, the Colvin Run Community Hall and the county agent's office in the court house building at Fairfax.

Julian B. Parnell, of Franconia, has announced his candidacy for the Fairfax county board of supervisors from Mount Vernon District. The incumbent is W. F. P. Reid, of Groveton, who has served more than a score of years.

Parnell has long taken an active part in the civic affairs of his district and favors a reduction in the tax rate. He is 54 years old, married, and has been a resident of Fairfax County for a number of years. He is a veteran of the Spanish-American War.

A three-act comedy, "The Strike of the Ladies' Aid," will be presented in the Franconia School auditorium to night at 8 o'clock under auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of Beaulah Baptist Church of Franconia. The play is being directed by Mrs. Ethel Peverill, and members of the cast include:

Miss Mary Ogden, Miss Blanche Kitson, Miss Martha Lyles, Miss Virginia Simms, Miss Florence Lyles, Miss Lillian Simms, Miss Edith Hall, Miss Dorothy Devers, Mrs. Timothy Peverill, Mrs. Edward Peverill, Mrs. George Peverill, Mrs. George Lyles, Miss Hazel Dodson, Miss Emma Talbert and Miss Mary Jane Fitzgerald.

The Occoquan Junior League has elected the following officers: Forrest Beane, president; Wallace Mann, vice president; Elzora Allen, secretary, and Eleanor Brawner, treasurer.

A meeting of interest to fishermen will be held at Fort Belvoir, tomorrow at 11 a. m., relative to the establishment of a target range on the military reservation in the vicinity of Accotink Bay. Fishermen contend the establishment of a range would interfere greatly with fishing in the waters of Accotink Bay, Accotink Creek and Pohick Bay.

The military authorities are willing to grant certain concessions if the range is located on the site selected. They include granting fishermen the right to use a part of the reservation near the old Belvoir docks for storage of supplies and a harbor for their boats, and the passage of motor-propelled craft through the firing zone while target practice is being held.

Chief Defends Force in Probe Of Robberies

Pleads Lack of Clews in Letter to Prince Georges Officials.

In a letter to the Prince Georges County Commissioners, Chief J. J. Crowley of the county police force yesterday declared the force was doing all within its power to combat the series of robberies in Cheverly, Md.

"In every instance where a complaint has reached this office," Chief Crowley wrote, "a thorough investigation has been made. Unfortunately in no instance has there been any identification or description of those committing the offense, other than a list of the goods stolen.

"We have promptly forwarded this list to Washington and Baltimore police headquarters with the request that pawn shops in both cities be visited with a view to apprehending offenders.

Health Parley Next Week.

"But up to this writing we have nothing that would lead to the arrest of anyone in connection with those robberies."

The commissioners, meeting at Upper Marlboro, decided that the board would attend the fifteenth annual conference of health officers and boards of health of Maryland to be held at Johns Hopkins University May 31 and June 1.

Rezoning Plea Is Made.

Walter L. Green, attorney, of Hyattsville, petitioned the rezoning of a tract at the intersection of Riggs road and the East-West highway, from residential A to commercial D. This was taken under advisement.

A delegation from Meadows, Md., appeared before the board to protest the granting of a license for the operation of a "public cafe, night club, dance hall, or any form of commercial public amusement at or near Meadowbrook Park."

They declared this was within 75 or 100 yards of the Nile Methodist Episcopal Church and the public school. They presented a petition of protest bearing 33 signatures.

New Plan of Allotting Road Funds Is Backed

Wytheville, Va., May 21 (AP).—One of the most important of the resolutions adopted at a conference of Salem and Bristol District highway advocates held here yesterday was one recommending that hereafter funds be allocated to the various districts in proportion to construction cost, a subject treated by the highway commission in a report at the end of 1933.

It long has been contended by counties in the mountainous sections that the fund distribution is inequitable because no consideration is given the materially higher cost of construction in the rough country as against that in the level Tidewater and Piedmont areas.

Milk Producers To Argue Plea On Withdrawal

Harrisonburg Dissenters to Be Given Hearing by State Board.

Harrisonburg, Va., May 21.—The State Milk Board, composed of J. S. Agnew, Burkesville, chairman; Kohn Brough, Roanoke, and Dr. T. S. Snavely, Charlottesville, will meet here Friday night to consider the petition of a number of producers of the Harrisonburg area that this region be dropped from the control of the board.

This is the first open break in the ranks of the Harrisonburg area producers and distributors since the passage of the milk control bill. The area was one of the first to be taken in by the board and even during the interim between the supreme court decisions on the constitutionality of the act the producers and distributors cooperated voluntarily.

Dr. H. G. Pickett, chairman of the Harrisonburg board, says the petition does not represent by any means the big majority of local dairymen and that the plan is working well. Harrisonburg enjoys the lowest retail milk prices in any area, although the price was raised 1 cent per quart when the milk control began operation. The increase was passed directly to the producers.

This will be the first meeting of the State board here. Those in the group opposing the petition intimate that the signers do not wish to cooperate in the program because of the assessment necessary to maintain the operation of the program. From the health standpoint, the City of Harrisonburg is putting into effect a milk ordinance more stringent than that required by the State.

Democrats Launch Campaign Today at Arlington Rally

Organized Women Voters Call Special Session to Hear Candidates.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

The campaign for the Democratic nomination for the State Senate and the House of Delegates will be launched today at a special meeting called by the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County. The meeting will be held at the Arlington Presbyterian Church and will be preceded by a luncheon at 12:30 o'clock.

The speakers will be Hugh Reid, of Arlington County, and John W. Rust, of Fairfax County, incumbent who seeks the nomination for the State Senate. William D. Medley, Arlington County's representative in the House of Delegates who seeks reelection, also will speak. Party leaders predict that Medley will be unopposed in the primary.

This is the first meeting the organization has held for the opportunity of candidates for the November election to put before the voters their policies. It is understood plans are being considered for a series of special meetings in order that candidates seeking election to county offices may set forth their platforms.

In the primary to be held August 6, Charles R. Fenwick, chairman of the county Democratic committee, announces fees shall be as follows:

For county clerk, $177.18.
For commissioner of revenue, $120.
For Commonwealth's attorney, $92.50.
For county treasurer, $120.
For sheriff, $88.48.
For county judge, $80.
For the House of Delegates, $14.
For the county board, $12.
For the Democratic executive Commitee, $5.

All fees are payable to the treasurer of the committee, Mrs. Clara L. Nevin.

The county board met at the courthouse last night with representatives of the Thrifton Valley Sanitary Corporation and other local sewer corporations, to discuss questions in connection with the county-wide sewer project now under construction. The parties interested were particularly concerned as to whether the county would take over existing lines and whether an assessment would be made against property abutting on such lines.

It was agreed that no assessment could be imposed upon property along such lines, where the owner already had paid a frontage fee. The board concurred in an informal understanding that private corporations which had constructed local sewers, should continue to own their respective systems and charge a uniform tapping fee against such property which had paid no such fee, but which should become connected with the sewers in the future. The fees so received would be distributed equally among all property owners who already had paid their fees, and would correspondingly reduce the charge for future connections.

It was further understod that the county would assume maintenance of all such lines, since a sewer tax is being levied uniformly for that purpose. As a further feature of of the agreement the county would be given the right to connect with, or extend, any of the lateral lines belonging to the parties.

R. W. Wirt, sanitary engineer for the county, was directed to make a survey of the trunk lines already installed by private corporations and report on which will be needed. Consideration of the question of payment for such lines was deferred until receipt of his report.

Mrs. Charles Storey was re-elected president of the Parent-Teacher Association of the James Monroe School last night. Other officers chosen were Mrs. John Beall, first vice president; Miss Clara Cottman, second vice president; Mrs. Carville D. Benson, jr., secretary, and Mrs. Robert L. Meadows, treasurer.

Gilbert Hall, member of the board of trustees of the Arlington Hospital Association, spoke on the need of a hospital in the county.

More than 150 persons attended the luncheon given yesterday by the auxiliary to the Clarendon Fire Department at the fire house. Most of the candidates attended. Proceeds will go for the benefit of the department.

Ladies of the Community Methodist Church at Aurora Heights will serve a benefit luncheon tomorrow from 12 to 2 o'clock at the church.

Two Policemen Win Promotion At Rockville

McAuliffe and Nolte, Lyddane Case Probers, Made Sergeants.

Policemen James S. McAuliffe and Joseph B. Nolte, who conducted most of the investigation leading to the murder conspiracy charges against Mrs. Anne Lyddane, of Rockville, yesterday were promoted to be sergeants by the Montgomery County commissioners.

The pair had been promoted to be sergeants prior to passage of the Prescott bill, which provided for return of 15 members of the county police force who had been ousted as part of the Fusion patronage program. The sergeantcies were lost by the return of Sergts. Leroy H. Snyder and Earl H. Burdine to their former rank. A bill then was introduced in the Legislature providing for two additional sergeants for the force in order that each police precinct station house might have two sergeants assigned to provide a commanding officer at all times in each station.

The commissioners appointed Charles W. Stang to be desk clerk at county police headquarters in Rockville at a salary of $75 a month. Stang succeeds Carl Ramey, who was appointed special aid to Chief of Police J. William Garrett at $125 a month.

Civic leaders from Kensington urged that the commissioners include a junior high school for Kensington in the school program. A similar plea had been made to the county board of education.

Dr. J. W. Bird and Judge Thomas M. Anderson appeared before the commissioners to urge inclusion of an item providing for a budget of $4,600 for the County Juvenile Court in the annual levy. This is the usual budget for the court, but heretofore $1,700 had been contributed by the Social Service League for probation work and it is expected that this will not be available this year since the league plans to continue only its activities as a private charitable organization and drop all public charity activities.

Rudy's Action In Naming Son Held a Mistake

Governor Says, However, He Won't Interfere With Appointment.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 21.—Gov. Harry W. Nice today termed action of Moter Vehicle Commissioner Walter R. Rudy in naming his son, W. Dana Rudy, to a post in the department a "mistake."

"I think that what Mr. Rudy should have done," the Governor said, "was to first consult the State employment commissioner on the need of an operators' examing (the post to which the younger Rudy was named) and then to have considered all the aspirants for the job.

"However, I can readily understand how the motor commissioner might want some one close to him in a post of such intimate relationship with him. Of course, young Mr. Rudy will have to take an examination and the examination will be open to any other persons who aspire to the job."

The Governor also said that, since the appointment had been made, he will not interfere with it. He emphasized that he did not "interfere with the merit system in this State in any way."

Fusionists Hit Recount Move; Query Legality

King and Karn Claim Spoiled Ballots Kept in Accessible Place.

In an attempt to forestall effort of their defeated Democratic opponents in the election last fall to be granted a recount of the votes, Fusionists Charles E. King and Frank Karn, both county commissioners, yesterday presented evidence at Rockville, Md., purporting to show that a recount would not be legal as spoiled, rejected and unused ballots had been kept in an accessible place since the election.

The evidence was presented before Police Court Judge Harold C. Smith, who was acting as a justice of the peace in receiving the depositions of the witnesses. The testimony of the several who were heard will be passed on to Judges Hammond Urner and Arthur D. Willard, of the Montgomery Circuit Court, on whom will rest the decision as to whether or not to grant the recount.

Five Attorneys.

The Democrats petitioning for a recount are John B. Diamond, former president of the county board of commissioners, and Raleigh S. China. They were represented by Capt. Joseph C. Cissel. Attorneys for the Fusionists were Kenneth Lyddane, F. Barnard Welsh, Vivian Simpson and Edward Peter.

Witnesses who testified included State Senator Stedman Prescott, F. Byrne Austin, clerk of the board of election supervisors; Clayton K. Watkins, clerk of the Montgomery County Circuit Court, and several men employed as janitors in the courthouse before and after the Fusionist candidates took office.

It was contended by attorneys for the two Fusionist commissioners that the unused, rejected and spoiled ballots, needed in a recount, were not kept in an inaccessible place as required by law and further that they were not turned over to the clerk of the court until February 28.

Identifies Packages.

Watkins' testimony was the identification of 48 packages of these ballots which had been in his custody since February 28. Many of these packages were not labeled as to the election district they were from. Some were loosly wrapped and others were merely bound by rubber bands.

Austin declared that during the time he kept the ballots they were locked in a closet where no one was allowed. The lawyers for the Fusionists attepmted to show that this closet was accessible by introducing the testimony of the janitors and Prescott, all of whom, it was claimed, possessed master keys fitting the closet door.

Baltimore City Wins Appeal From Liability in Park Death

Appellate Court Reverses $3,000 Judgment in Boy's Drowning.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., May 21.—A Baltimore city court judgment of $3,000 awarded parents of William Wallace Ahrens, 10 years old, who was drowned in a pool at Gwynn Falls, was reversed today by the Court of Appeals.

Judge Walter J. Mitchell handed down the opinion of the court, favorable to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, who lost the case in the lower court. No new trial was allowed.

Ahrens was drowned when, with his Sunday-school teacher and 10 boys, he went for a walk in Gwynn Falls Park. Although he could not swim the lad waded into the stream and disappeared.

Pointing out that youth always has and always will furnish its death and accident toll, the court declared that "lamentable as this situation may be, it can not be corrected by placing upon municipal governments, the burden, and the taxation incident thereto, of guarding against the possibility of fatalities in public parks.

"In a word, to hold municipalities liable in damages, under the circumstances such as are revealed in the incident case, would be against public policy, because it would retard the expansion and development of parking systems, in and around our growing cities, and stifle a gratuitous Government activity vitally necessary to the health, contentment and happiness of the inhabitants.

"Our conclusion, therefore, is that the maintenance, control and operation of Gwynn Falls Park by the appellant, is a Government duty, discretionary in its nature, performed in its political and governmental capacity as an agency of the State."

Shoreham Sets June 1 as Date Of Dance Shift

To Expand Toward Terrace, Open Lounge There for Cocktails.

By Kay Ware.

More openings are set. The Shoreham expects to expand in the direction of the terrace June 1. On this date the terrace lounge will also be available for cocktail parties. An enlarged floor, a New York dance team and a fashion show are promised for the opening evening.

Meanwhile, in the ballroom, Ramon and Ruth continue another week and Toma Genaro acrobatic dancer and Ewen Hail, tenor and m. c., are back for another engagement.

Ramon's Garden is open and flourishing. Nice place for suppers, that.

Carleton tempts us with a suggestion that its garden may open soon, but won't give a date.

And don't forget that Heigh-Ho and Club Habana are done up in mothballs. Also don't forget that their entertainers travel to the Powhatan Roof and the Arlington ditto (respectively) next week.

Bamboo room has a very special recipe for mint juleps. In fact, they swear that the original Kentucky colonel left his notes in the wine cellar. If you don't believe it, ask the Willard's own Miss Cunningham, who knows all.

"Steppers of 1935" appear at the Lotus this week, with Marrone and Gallo, dance team; Zona Hall, and Retta Ray, both dancers. Adding a bit of nuttiness is another of Al Norton's skits. You'll like it.

At Napoleon's French Restaurant, Ann Arlen, violinist; Peggy Hurdle, pianist, and Dick Sweeney, saxophonist, entertain in the Flemish room.

Hi-Hat notes:
All of the check-room girls, cigarette girl, cashier, et al, appeared the other night with gardenias, the gift of an anonymous well-wisher.

Red stars on the wine list indicate the favorites.

The Mayflower's lounge has evolved something new—a sort of weekly - meeting - of - friends - who-like-to-sip-and-dance. Various persons have made a habit of gathering at the lounge once a week. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McReynolds and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jacobsen started the idea, it is said.

Dancer Dorothy Barlow and the Three Paige Sisters top the Madrillon floor entertainment this week.

The Paiges—Christine, Jean and Peggy, sing and dance their way through "Object of My Affections," "Okay, Toots," and "My Man." The climax of their program is a pirate number.

Leon Brusiloff and his orchestra are still playing anything requested, but they have been known to pout after playing "Isle of Capri" for the sixth time in an hour.

Line-up at Childs Gingham Club: The Matthews twins, Peggy and Peter, with all sorts of fancy dances; also Anita Lester, an acrobat, and Dorothy Rozelle, specialty pianist. Miss Rozelle has made a habit of jotting requests into a book, then using the book as a reminder. Business-like for an artist, isn't it?

The Mayfair will put on a fashion show soon. At present a trio entertains during cocktail hour. "Tiny" is expected to fill another engagement there, with smart songs and pianistic flourishes.

High spots at River Bend: An addition on the original long building, a new dance floor (ready by May 29), fried chicken in Virginia country style, George Reese and orchestra for dancers.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Manhattan Promenade.

New York, May 21.

Sunday feature writers are missing a grand story about a game and courageous person on East Fifty-ninth street. The hero of the piece would be Charles Weeghman, once a multimillionaire operator of a chain of one-arm restaurants in the Midwest. At 53, he has started all over again in New York with one restaurant, and it has "caught on." Weeghman was one of three boys from Richmond, Ind., who were to become fabulously wealthy. The three of them ran away from their homes in 1893 to attend the Chicago World's Fair. One was Weeghman, one was Daniel G. Reid, the third was William Leeds, sr. Weeghman invented the one-arm restaurant chair, promoted a chain of one-arm restaurants, and ran his bank roll up to $7,000,000. Reid became the colossus of tin plate, and at one time was worth $40,000,000. Leeds, the third Richmond, Ind., lad, shared with him the Tin Plate King title, and was one of the first of America's great yachtsmen. Luck soured for Weeghman when he was persuaded to organize the Federal League to fight organized baseball. The experiment cost him $3,500,000, and the crash completed his financial downfall. Another man, similarly placed, might have chosen suicide. At 53, Weeghman cheerily has set about amassing another fortune. His restaurant has already clicked, and the big fellow hustles from table to table, seeing that his waiters haven't forgotten anything. I take off my hat to Charles Weeghman. He has plenty of heart, and he can't miss.

Mayor LaGuardia, greeting Joe Louis, Detroit's colored heavyweight sensation, yielded to the temptation to generalize and warned him against the evils of Broadway. That is trite advice and not accurate. Eddie Cantor, Jack Benny, Kate Smith, Sam H. Harris, Sophie Tucker, Harry M. Warner, Nick Schenck, Dan Dealy—these are some Broadway residents, and they are pretty fine people. Brodway will only hurt those moral weaklings who would be equally vulnerable to the temptations of any Main Street. Mayor LaGuardia might better have advised Joe Louis to go to Broadway and pattern his career after that of Bill Robinson, the dancing genius of his own race, who stepped along Broadway to fame and fortune without losing his balance.

There is a large diamond, topped by two smaller diamonds, which Sophie Tucker always wears on her left hand. She wears it because these three stones taught her how to save her money, so diamonds are trumps. She is as proud of them as you are of your bank book, and for the same reason. Twenty years ago, Sophie played 22 weeks in Chicago in "Louisiana Lou," and she got $200 a week. But the poker games that followed each night's performance were costly. At the end of the long run in Chicago, she owed $550. Frank Behring, manager of the Sherman Hotel, took her aside: "Sophie, you're just a youngster in this business," he said, "and I've seen a lot of 'em come and go. Most of them die broke. I'm going to teach you how to save your money." So he took her to a jewelry store in the Loop, and to her amazement, picked out a costly diamond ring that featured two smaller diamonds and one huge stone. "She'll mail you $25 a week," he told the jeweler, "and if she doesn't, I'll make good." For 52 weeks, Sophie set aside $25 and sent it back to the Chicago store. By the time she had completed the systematic payments, she had learned how to save systematically. Today, she is a wealthy woman. She thanks Behring for it, and she always wears the diamond ring.

Boris Morros, managing director of the Paramount Theater, on Broadway, brought the ghost of Rasputin into Madison Square Garden Saturday night. Throughout the huge N. V. A. benefit show there, Boris sat at the left side of the stage, issuing his orders, and all night long he held a string of red beads in his hands. Rasputin, the Mad Monk of Russia, gave them to him in 1909, while Morros was a violinist in the Imperial Orchestra at St. Petersburg. The beads, in Russian, would be called a "tchotki," a good luck token, and for 26 years Boris has held a superstitious and reverent regard for Rasputin's memento. He claims they saved his life once, while he was traveling to Constantinople. Gloria Swanson offended Boris deeply when she played the Paramount Theater, refusing to touch them for luck. "She found out," says Boris. "She had one of the poorest weeks in the history of our theater."

After the Jack Inglis benefit at the Ambassador Theater Sunday night, Conrad Nagel and myself walked down Broadway. At Forty-seventh street the marquee of the Central Theater was plastered with signs advertising George Raft and Spencer Tracy in a fourth-run flicker. "There's something for your 'Water Under the Bridge' column, Ed," suggested Nagel. "Most people think that Alice Brady and myself opened in 'Forever After' at the Playhouse. Actually, we opened at the Central Theater, right here, and the theater was dedicated that night. I'll never forget it. They were installing a water-sprinkler system, and I'd laid out all my clothes on the cot in my dressing room. An hour before the show some master mind decided to try out the sprinkler system in the theater. My clothes, every stitch I was to wear in the first act, were ruined, soaking wet. That's a real 'Water Under the Bridge' item."

Soft Coal Men Issue a Threat To Call Strike

Warn Congress of Walkout June 17 Unless Union Comes to Terms.

By the Associated Press.

Appalachian soft coal mine operators tossed into Congress' lap last night the threat of a Nation-wide bituminous strike June 17.

The threat took the form of an announcement that the negotiations between the producers and the union on new wage and hour contracts had collapsed. Duncan C. Kennedy, of Charleston, W. Va., chairman of the joint wage committee, said in a statement:

"A canvass of the situation by representatives of both sides revealed such a breakdown of stable competitive relationships, and such increasing confusion and uncertainty in the industry that the operators are in no position to make definite committments for wages, hours and conditions of employment."

John L. Lewis, president of the mine union, reiterated his position that not a miner would enter the pits June 17 unless contracts were signed before then. He announced that the union's national policy committee would meet here Monday "to discuss what will happen after June 16 if there are no contracts signed." Strike plans will be discussed.

The miners want Congress to enact the Guffey coal stabilization bill, to create a "little NRA" for the coal industry and to strengthen price control. One large group of operators, claiming to represent two-thirds of the country's commercial tonnage, has expressed itself in favor of the Guffey bill. Another group, mostly from the South and West and claiming to represent a substantial majority of all tonnage, opposes the Guffey bill but wants the NRA coal code extended another two years with strengthened price control provisions.

All Appalachian operators having contracts with the union are to meet here Monday at 4 p. m. They will receive the wage committee's report, along with the committee's recommendation that the entire conference adjourn sine die.

5-22-35
—Constantinople, 532, A.D.—

Strange as it seems, one of the bloodiest riots in all history started in an argument over a horse race. There were underlying causes, but like a single assassin started the World War in 1914, so a disputed horse race started a riot in Constantinople which cost the lives of 80,000 people and left most of the center of the city in ruins.

The riot started just a week after the prefect of the city caused the execution of some criminals who happened to be prominent politically. Vain appeals to the emperor against such executions led to widespread public tension which needed only an excuse to flare up in riot. The excuse came at the public games when the judges made an unpopular chariot race decision. The crowd started a riot which lasted several days, during which fire was set to many buildings. When peace was restored 80,000 people were dead, and the city was in shambles.

"Necessity money" in the form of postage stamps was circulated in the United States in the 1860's when there was a shortage of small coins. Loose postage stamps were not suited for use as money, and it remained for John Gault, of New York to invent a method of adapting them. He made a small circular, coin-like container, with a mica covering on one side under which the stamps of various denominations could be placed. These were circulated in place of money. Space for advertising was sold on the opposite side of the coins, and many companies bought issues of this type of money which was issued in denominations of 1, 3, 5, 10, 12, 24, 30 and 90 cents. Today they are prized as collectors' items.

Capital Society Flocks to Circus With Children

Mrs. Longworth Attends With Paulina and Her Young Friends.

Next to the baseball games, the circus brings out greater crowds of people, old and young, than anything else in Washington, and for the last two days Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Circus has been in town, much to the delight of small boys and girls, and only a little less to their elders.

The stands of the big top were filled to capacity yesterday afternoon with gay groups of children, some with parents, others with nurse, and all of them intent on the happenings in the sawdust ring.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, wearing a smart navy blue and white print, watched the performance through her lorgnette with scarcely less interest that did her young daughter, Paulina, who occupied a box with a group of school friends. They had every delightful thing the circus could offer—pop, peanuts, popcorn, ice cream cones, and a lavish array of balloons, mickey-mouse favors, Spanish hats and all the enthusiasm needed to enjoy thoroughly the spectacle. Nearby were Senator and Mrs. Robert Carey, with their daughter, Miss Sarah Carey, attracting much interest among the boys in their section when "the idol of young America," Col. Tim McCoy, leader of the Wild West Show, in his cream colored ten-gallon hat and high-heeled boots, greeted the Senator during the show.

Skin Freshened By All-Round Facial Cream

Single Treatment Does the Work of 3 or 4 Cosmetics.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THERE ARE many women who haven't the money to buy three or four creams. There are just as many who haven't the time to use more than one. And, of course, there are those of us who are just too lazy to treat our skins to a luscious repast of first one cream and another.

It is for the budgeteers, the hustlers and us lazy ones that a large cosmetic company has created a fine cream that takes the place of several. It is a basic all-round cream for the daily care of the skin. It cleanses, nourishes and clarifies. And because it does these three things it helps keep the skin young and vital.

It is different from other creams in that it contains a wholly new ingredient, triactin, which is said to duplicate the skin's own gland fluid. Combined with triactin are fine cleansing and nourishing oils mixed with the juice of fresh lemons.

Mildly Bleaching.

Note please, fresh lemons. You are probably familiar with some lemon creams, which, sad to state, contain lemon extract, taken from the rind. This often proves drying and irritating to sensitive skins. Fresh lemon juice, however, has an altogether different effect. It is mildly bleaching and infinitely soothing and refreshing.

Perhaps, too, you'll wonder about the remarkable texture of this unique cream. It is the result of a new mixing process. The cream is whipped until it has the consistency of real whipped cream. Naturally, when it is applied to the skin, it penetrates quickly. For this reason, the first application should be removed at once to carry off the dirt and cleanse the skin. The second should be allowed to penetrate and act as a nourisher.

This excellent little beautifier is conservatively priced. You may buy a standard size jar of it for $1, or a larger one for $2. It is truly the answer to the one-cream woman's prayer.

Keeping Hair Glamorous.

If there is glamour in your hair, bring it out by giving yourself a daily brushing treatment with a certain scientifically planned brush now taking the beauty world by storm.

This is a brush which was designed to accentuate the wave in your hair. It also keeps it soft, sheeny and luxurious looking.

Maybe you doubt that one small brush could do all this. Maybe you think that the less brushing, the better your wave. Or maybe you think just any old brush will do as well as any other. You'll quickly change your mind after you see the brush display at a downtown store and hear about the many fine qualities of this one.

Of course there's a reason it does the things it does. See the bristles and you'll understand. They are firm, penetrating bristles that will brush right through the thickest hair. But what's more, they are uniquely trimmed with spacing between tufts. It is this feature that prompts dermatologists and hair specialists to recommend this brush for use on permanently waved hair. It gives the scalp a stimulating vibrating treatment, does not stretch the wave, but rather gives the hair a greater tendency to curl naturally by increasing its buoyancy and elasticity.

New Lotion Softens Skin.

How to keep the skin on your body as soft, smooth and supple as your face—that is the question which bothers thousands of fastidious women.

This problem is solved with the advent of a new body rub, a soothing lotion that penetrates deeply, keeping the skin soft and protecting it from exposure. It vanishes almost as soon as it is applied, so you need not fear that your stocking or girdle will stick after using it.

Art Pupils in 'Teens Draw From Life; Teacher Views Experiment as Success

Harris & Ewing.

Miss Yard Finds Girls Detached in Attitude on Living Models.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

INHIBITIONS, complexes and self-consciousness get their start in adolescence. Until they enter their teens most children are as natural as flowers. Then they begin to suffer embarrassment over things they formerly took for granted. Frequently the rest of their lives is tinged with this embarrassment and an unbecoming self-consciousness.

These facts are so well established that Margaret Yard certainly takes no credit for their discovery. But she does claim the authorship of a plan for dealing satisfactorily with them. The plan in reality is an experiment which Miss Yard, a young art teacher who is something of an amateur psychologist, began in her art classes last fall.

At that time she did a heretofore unheard-of thing: Put three little girls, 13 and 14 years old, in the life class. According to Miss Yard, voluble and dynamic, the experiment has been entirely successful. Without batting an eye or raising a flush, the youngsters placed their easels among those of the grown-ups and fell to work sketching the nude models.

Parents' Consent Obtained.

But before she admitted the three adolescents to the life class Miss Yard made sure their parents were willing, that the girls had gone far enough in their art training, and that they were ready psychologically to draw from life.

The 13 and 14 year old girls are as detached in their attitude toward a living model as toward a still-life group of apples and eggplants, their teacher declared yesterday at her progressive art school, 2117 LeRoy place.

The youngsters prefer women to men as models. But then so do other members of the life class; seems that women make better art subjects.

From studying the lines, planes and coloring of the interesting looking professional models the three adolescents are learning how to appear as individuals rather than regimented schoolgirls, Miss Yard believes.

Becomes Art Conscious.

One of the young pupils, she explained, cut her hair recently so that she looked like a figure in a Botticelli. She had become art conscious, according to Miss Yard. No longer was she content to pattern her hair cut and her facial expression after every other girl's.

The members of the youthful trio also have learned to dress in better taste. They didn't get much help along this line from the art class, Miss Yard admitted. But their course in portraiture gave them valuable ideas on the color and line of clothes.

They Receive Valuable Ideas on Clothes From Course, She Says.

In fact the three girls have gained so much from their stay in the life class that Miss Yard plans to continue the experiment with other pupils. She will insist, however, that a student be at least 13 years old before drawing from life. And she will demand a prelude of at least three years' study at her school; two years of purely imaginative drawing, one year of portraiture.

Prefer Pretty Objects.

In the present portrait class are boys and girls of ten. Sometimes they pose for each other. Sometimes professional models are used. The children, Miss Yard has learned, prefer to draw something "pretty," a figure or object which can be translated into a fairy tale.

Adolescent boys will eventually get into the life class, she hopes. There were none ready for it at the time the three girls entered.

The school will hold an exhibition of all the pupils' work beginning May 28. It will be open daily for two weeks.

Report Reveals Rapid Increase In Marriages

PROPERITY MAY not have returned entirely, but it has certainly reestablished itself at the marriage license bureau. The annual "social changes" number of the American Journal of Sociology reveals that marriages increased rapidly in 1933 and 1934, numbering 1,245,000 in 1934, as compared with 982,000 in 1932.

Since economic improvement has not been adequate to account for the rise, other factors have been suggested as influencing the increase in the number of marriages. These include the theory that better organization of relief has caused many couples to decide they need wait no longer to marry and that some couples have already postponed their weddings so long they are now marrying regardless of economic conditions.

The study of social changes also points out that the death rate, which declined from 1929 to 1933, showed an increase of 55,000 in 1934; that the "back-to-the-land" movement that attracted so much attention in 1933 has been replaced by a country-to-city movement of 227,000 persons in 1934; that infant mortality, which decreased from 1928 to 1933 and remained stationary in 1933, increased in 1934; that the general trend of relief rolls has been upward from July, 1933, through December, 1934.

Sample Menu Is Suggested For High School Class Dinner

Chicken Shortcake Easily Prepared and Price Is Reasonable.

By Dorothea Duncan.

NOT LEAST among the worries of the entertainment committee is the planning of the high school senior dinner. If the dinner is to be served at a hotel, the matter is simplified to the extent of choosing the best menu offered for the amount of money on hand. If, however, the dinner is to be prepared and served at the school the problem becomes more complex.

From a standpoint of appetite appeal, it is best to choose dishes that are generally liked. The choice of meats rests between beef and chicken. Chicken is given preference because it is more reasonable in price. Then, too, the preparation and serving of chicken shortcake is an easy matter.

The selection of first course, vegetables, salad and dessert is a seasonable choice of reigning favorites and each dish can be prepared with the least amount of effort.

Broth Used In Sauce

Large stewing chickens can be cooked by simmering the day preceding the dinner. The broth should be retained (it must be cooled and kept overnight in the refrigerator to keep from souring) and used in the sauce for the chicken. The meat is cut from the bone and cubed; both dark and white meat should be used. The sauce is a medium white sauce made with the broth instead of milk or cream. The chicken is heated in the sauce and served between large round biscuits.

The potatoes should be small and of uniform size. They may be scrubbed and cooked in the jackets. After they are skinned, keep them hot in a covered pan which has been set over gently boiling water. A little melted butter and chopped parsley should be spooned over the potatoes after they have been placed on each plate.

Splitting the rolls and spreading them with butter before they are heated in the oven will eliminate the necessity of bread and butter plates and butter spreaders.

Fruit Cup Suggestions.

Any seasonal fresh fruit, with the exception of strawberries, which are to be served for dessert, may be used for the fruit cup. A combination of canned and fresh fruit will bring down the cost of the menu. If citrus fruit is to be used, peel it the easiest way. Use a small, sharp knife. Remove the skin from each end of the orange or grapefruit, cutting away the rind and the white. Then carefully peel down the skin from one end of the fruit to the other, being careful to remove all the white membrane but none of the pulp.

After the skin and membrane have been removed, the pulp can be cut from the inner membrane in long, clean slices. Any juice that is left in the inner membrane may be pressed out and added to the fruit.

Delicate, light angel cakes may be purchased for so nominal a sum that it is cheaper to buy them than to try to bake them.

This type of menu requires little equipment other than a good stove and oven and a sufficient number of large pots. The meat dish eliminates the necessity of carving, and for that reason can be served to a large group piping hot.

Senior Class Dinner Menu.

Fresh fruit cup
Chicken shortcake
Parsley new potatoes
Buttered fresh peas
Hearts of lettuce with Thousand Island dressing
Hot buttered rolls
Ice cream with crushed fresh strawberries
Angel cake Beverage

Cook School Series To End Tomorrow

Miss Duncan to Speak on 'The Bride Entertains.'

The third and last of a series of cooking schools for the bride-elect which is sponsored by the General Baking Company will be conducted tomorrow evening, at 8 o'clock in its model kitchen, 2146 Georgia avenue.

Dorthea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Washington Post, will speak on "The Bride Entertains." Miss Harriet Bishopp, Consumers Service director of the company here, is conducting the school and has many surprises planned.

Besides the bride, the school will appeal especially to the young married woman and the business and professional woman. This class is free and anyone may attend.

Rat Bite Is Likely to Cause An Uncommon Type of Fever

ALTHOUGH not a common disease, rat-bite fever is reported with sufficient frequency to merit attention.

In considering diseases transmitted by animals or insects to man, we must realize that it is not the bite itself of the rat or of the mosquito or of the wood tick that is serious. The wound serves as a means of inoculating the victim with some type of infection harbored by the animal or the insect.

The course of the disease may be understood clearly by describing a case history. A young man while killing rats in a barn was bitten on the right thumb. For about two weeks the thumb remained swollen and the wound discharged a small amount of pus. Signs of inflammation gradually disappeared, although the patient felt weak and out of sorts.

Three weeks later he was suddenly seized with a chill. This was followed by pains in the thighs, headache, a rather high temperature, and reddish blotches on the skin. The lymph glands in the neck, under the arms, and in the groins were enlarged. On the second day the temperature reached 105 degrees F., dropping to normal on the fourth day. No temperature was present for three days thereafter. Suddenly, however, the whole procedure was repeated—chill, temperature, skin eruption, etc. At first the condition was thought to be typhoid fever and only after repeated periods was the true character of the disease detected. Following injections of an organic form of arsenic the symptoms gradually disappeared.

Prevention lies in prompt cauterization with pure carbolic acid, followed by alcohol, of all wounds caused by the bites of animals.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Other men having set the precedent, I am now following their example by coming to you with a question. I am the worried, hard-working head of a medium-sized family; one of those fellows who never seem able to get a dollar in the bank against a rainy day. I put money in the bank, yes—regularly. But just as regularly it comes out again and I have to be fast on my feet at times to head off the little slip that means overdraft.

• • • •

After 12 years' effort to balance the budget and talk my wife into an understanding of our joint responsibilities in such a matter, I find I am no nearer success in either veture than I was six months after we married. There were years when my earnings steadily mounted; then came the well-known depression and I netted cuts which now amount to 25 per cent of what I was getting in "peak" times and have not yet been restored.

• • • •

My wife, a business woman before we married, has definite ideas about how we should live. Never put off getting for cash tomorrow what you can get on credit today, seems to be her motto. Result: we live in a nice little home in a swank neighborhood that we're paying rent for; we enjoy all the household conveniences, mostly paid for; a car, which will be ours, with a few more payments; I have a chronic grouch and she a continuous grievance.

From habit, I suppose, I balk at any new expenditure she suggests. She sets her ja.. and goes ahead, often telling me that if it wasn't for her grit in lifting the family by its bootstraps, I'd still be the $25-a-week hireling I was when she married me.

• • • •

Now, I hold the thought—is it self-delusion, Miss Haworth?—that I might have done even better if instead of applying the spur and the boot, she had given me my head from the beginning? Don't you think it's man's nature to get mulish when he's subjected to too much pushing and shoving from home base?

• • • •

Well, what I started to ask you, I guess, is this: Who's right, the wife or me? Is such a woman a helpmate or a handicap? Should I be thankful for having a wife with "push and go", who refuses, as she says, "to bid the devil good morning until she meets him," or would I have been more of a success if I'd set my foot down ten years ago and definitely asserted myself as the one and only captain of our particular ship?

DEAR HEN PECKED: It's problematic, at best, whether you would have been more materially successful had you taken the reins entirely in your own hands years ago. Financial success, I have observed, is the result of a happy combination of factors, not the least among which is fortuitous circumstance. However, you might have been happier had you been free to evolve a life along more philosophical, less acquistive lines.

• • • •

Whether your wife has been a helpmate or a handicap is also open to speculation. There's always the possibility you are a dawdler masking as a philosopher: mildly dissatisfied with things as they are, yet unwilling to make the effort or assume the responsibility of changing them. She may understand you better than you know yourself, and realize a strong irritant is needed to drive you to accomplishments which you enjoy, once achieved. All that you represent may be entirely due to her, even to your privately entertained opinion you might have gone further without her. Barrie wrote a play built on a similar theme. It's called, "What Every Woman Knows."

• • • •

On the other hand, I am inclined to believe no man possessing inherent force of character can submit indefinitely to even the most subtly inflicted brow-beating from his wife. Sooner or later nature equalizes the situation by some sort of explosion and counter-attack. If you are competent to captain your own ship, you won't be able to abide being forever harnessed to your wife's ambitions. If you stay harnessed, it's because you look to a driver.

Casual Frock for Summer Designed on Simple Lines

Pattern No. 926.

NOW THAT wash materials have become so popular for all-round summer wear a woman can go anywhere in a frock like this and feel perfectly dressed. It is plain, but not severe, and not so definitely the sports type as the prevalent shirtwaist frock. The circular surplice collar and the little circular sleeves follow the new flair for softer lines even in sturdier materials. The pattern is so simple that even an inexperienced seamstress can manage it nicely. Just seven pieces, and a large instruction chart shows how to proceed.

The pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 44. Size 18 (36) requires 4¾ yards of 35-inch material for the dress, three-fourths yard for the collar, with 4¼ yards of novelty bias binding.

What Today Means

"Gemini."

IF MAY 22 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

If born on this date, as one of Gimini's people, the flowers which are your natural affinitives are the lily of the valley, lavender, trailing arbutus and marigold. Colors you should find conducive to harmonious optical restfulness are yellow and pink. Wednesday should be an auspicious day for you, especially in business transactions. The marts of trade should show great activity today, and results, as a whole, be very satisfactory. It is advisable to encourage sociability today, as it may help establish a friendly relationship with one which is likely to prove of value.

Avoid being impulsive in thought or action, for deliberation is important for individual enterprise for the next 24 hours. Married and engaged couples, as well as those courting, may avoid trouble if they carefully consider any friendly suggestions regarding personal actions, which they receive today.

If a woman and May 22 is your natal day, you may be inclined to allow the opinion of other people to influence you too easily. You will be much happier if you do not permit the views expressed by friends to send you soaring one minute up in the clouds, and possibly the next minute away down into the depths.

The child born on May 22, while passing through the period of adolescence, should be taught discipline tempered with tact and an abundance of love.

If a man and May 22 is your birth anniversary, you have unusually good reasoning powers, which can be advantageously used in business. You will make probably a greater success if you abstain from ever resorting to high-pressure methods in business transactions. Your personal appearance will possibly play an important part in your commercial contacts. The legal or medical profession, lecture platform, theatrical business or radio, as well as journalism and salesmanship, have worth-while inducements to offer a man of your ability.

The Federal Diary

Trade-Mark Registered U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

PROPOSALS to substitute enlisted men for civilian employes in two Government agencies at opposite ends of the country yesterday aroused alarm among employe leaders that a precedent would be set to the extreme detriment of employes.

BAKER.

The two places reported to be slated for shifts from civilian to enlisted personnel are the aircraft base at Sunnyvale, Calif., on July 1, and the Coast Guard depot at Curtis Bay, Md.

Employes at the Sunnyvale base have been more or less in a job panic since the Macon disaster this spring, for there has been no definite asurance about the future of the base, or how the existing personnel might be fitted into the future.

Government employe leaders, particularly those affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, feel the procedure of substituting enlisted men for civilian employes will spread to establishments in Washington and other points throughout the country.

The situation at Curtis Bay, especially, is cause of concern among the civilians, where the Coast Guard apparently is following the example of the Navy Department in the Sunnyvale base. For the last two years a number of 75-foot patrol boats have been tied up at the Curtis Bay Coast Guard Depot. During this period some sank. The sunken boats are being floated and, it is said, will be towed to a base in Maine for reconditioning. About 20 percent of the per diem force engaged in this work is reported to have been dismissed.

It is pointed out enlisted men employed on mechanical work are paid much less per diem, and are subject to military regulations requiring them to do shop work eight hours or more daily and making them liable to court-martial if they object.

Newell Leads Again.

Charles J. Newell, National Park Service, again wins first honors in the weekly tabulations of the membership campaign being conducted by the National Federation of Federal Employes. Other winners announced yesterday include Mrs. Minnie D. Stevens, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and Mrs. Sue Inge, Treasury.

Miss Matilda Lindsay, national organizer, reports "virtually every union in the District registering a sharp increase." Winner of the grand prize in the three-month campaign will go to the N. F. F. E. convention in Yellowstone National Park in September with all expenses paid.

"Hot Copy" Ready.

Employes at Agriculture are looking forward enthusiastically to the presentation of the first full-length play by the Department's Musical and Theatrical Guild tomorrow and Friday night in the South Building Auditorium. "Hot Copy" is a three-act comedy dealing with, as the title suggests, newspaper people liberally sprinkled with small-town politics.

Under the direction of George W. Field (P), BAE, the following will take part:

Morris Bowling, AAA; Lois Rankin, AAA; John Peterson, BAI; Della Mae Bowling, AAA; Doris Menter, BDI; Mr. Field, Robert Campbell, BAE; Henry Chamberlin, AAA; Marguerite Dodson, BAE, and Edith Aymar, BAI.

Miss Virginia Ray (C), recently appointed to Hydrographic Office, Navy, will follow in the footsteps of her predecessors by entering law school in September.

Oklahoma Citians Wait To Flee Nearing Flood

Oklahoma City, May 21 (AP).—Families still clinging to their lowland homes here maintained an anxious vigil tonight in the path of approaching flood waters which already have contributed heavily to a storm death toll of 21 in the Southwest since Saturday.

Water rolled over thousands of acres between El Reno and Geary, but Harry Wahlgren, weather forecaster, said, "the crest will not strike Oklahoma City for at least 24 hours."

Officials ordered workers to be ready with National Guard and fire trucks at 7 a. m. tomorrow to evacuate more families from the lowlands to a tented city in a park if necessary.

Kennamer Is Released From Oklahoma Prison

Tulsa, Okla., May 21 (AP).—Phil Kennamer, a Federal judge's son who said his unrequited love for a pretty oil heiress figured in the shooting to death of another youth, was ordered released under appeal bond from the State penitentiary by a district judge today.

The 19-year-old central figure in Tulsa's "young society" murder trial was said to be ill, but secrecy surrounded plans to take him from prison at McAlester, where he has been since March 4, serving a 25-year term for manslaughter.

He was convicted at Pawnee, Okla., last February after pleading self-defense and insanity in the shooting of John Gorrell, a throat specialist's son, here Thanksgiving night, 1934.

The Game of Life

By Priscilla Wayne.

Ellen and Michael Dale began married life blissfully in their new home, but Mrs. Mallory, who has disapproved of Mike from the first, succeeds in ruining her daughter's happiness. It is her mother's staggering accumulation of debts that sends Ellen back to work against Mike's wishes. It is because of her mother's accusations that Ellen finally believes Mike is seeing too much of Marjorie Hutton, and it is at her mother's suggestion Ellen goes so far as to file suit for a divorce she doesn't want. But when she and Mike discover that a baby is on the way they decide to patch things up and go on. Even after the arrival of Michael Dale, jr., Ellen and Mike fail to regain their happiness. Ellen finds some amusement in her mother's "love affair."

ELLEN tried discussing Mama's affair with Aunt Ellen. The conversation provided an interesting study in human nature. For Aunt Ellen who had been sympathetically interested in the girl's love affair turned cold attention to the love affairs of the older woman.

"There never," said Aunt Ellen distinctly, "there just never was a fool like an old fool. Why doesn't your mother let well enough alone? She's got a good, comfortable home, even if she does have to scrimp and save. And she's got her little boy to raise. I tell you, she's a dunce for messing into any love affair at her age."

"At her age? Why, Aunt Ellen, Mama's only in her forties. She's got half of her life to live. Bob will be going away—just as I went away. And you can't be with Mama always. She'll be bitterly lonely."

Little Demon Laughs.

"Huh, not without me," the old lady grunted. "She always hated me. I was your father's old-maid-school-teacher-sister to her—a perfectly useless member in a household. No, I tell you frankly, Ellen, that if your mother persists in doing any such ridiculous thing as getting married I'll not stand by. I'm through. I just wash my hands of her completely."

Inside Ellen's brain a merry little demon laughed. So Aunt Ellen would wash her hands of Mama. Yes, every generation was like the other—folks of different ages just dressed differently, that was all. They thought alike.

The winter was not too easy.

In December, when young Michael was four months old he started cutting tooth after tooth. He was cross and fretful but growing like a weed and Doctor John laughed when Ellen worried.

"He's all right, Ellen. Spring is coming and then he can be outdoors all summer and get brown as a berry. Don't worry, we'll just keep him coming along with these precious little teeth of his."

Nor were things happy otherwise in the Michael Dale household. Michael was working very hard—almost night and day it seemed to Ellen. Michael had explained, at elaborate and formal length, which gave Ellen the impression that he explained because he felt that he needed to explain and not because he really wanted to, that, since car sales were off, he had let one of the "inside" men go and was taking his place. It saved a salary and the new and struggling firm needed desperately to save all it could.

That accounted, Michael explained, for the many evenings and partial evenings it was necessary to spend away from home.

Budget Was Low.

Ellen listened, politely. In her heart she felt certain that Michael was glad enough to stay away—they seemed of late to have so little in common. Only Michael jr.—kicking and crying and teething and gurgling and growing stronger and more handsome every day.

The financial load was not too light. Michael had had to lower the family allowance again. "I'm sorry, Ellen, but we'll just have to scrimp through. When spring comes and car sales pick up, then we'll be in better financial condition. Right now it's pretty tough going.

"Of course I can get along," Ellen said, and wondered how she could possibly. Mama was more and more difficult. Her love affairs with Mr. Hardesty seemingly hadn't progressed. Mama was constantly getting into hot water over new bills she had contracted for things she said she just couldn't possibly do without, and, if she came any nearer to a solution of her difficulties she did not confide the fact to Ellen.

Mother Fretted.

Besides, she was fretful, quarrelsome. "I just can't understand you, Ellen," she said one day. "You're married to a rich man, well, at least a successful business man, and yet you're so stingy with your own mother. Here I've just asked for $5, a measly little $5 bill to get a few absolute necessities with, and you act as though I wanted you to float a government loan."

Ellen tried for the hundredth time to explain the position.

"Mama, you know there are the regular payments I assumed down at the bank—and the furniture payments that I promised you I'd take care of. I've even had to cut into the household allowance to do that. I do everything at home, even the washings and that's a big item with baby, just so I can pay on these debts of yours."

"You're an ungrateful girl, Ellen," Mama sobbed. "You seem to forget all the years that I sacrificed for you."

No More Help.

"No, I don't, Mama," miserably, "I just can't do any more, that's all. If the business were only a more solid position, but Michael has to put some of his salary back into it—he doesn't want to get in the red——"

Mama laughed and her laugh held more than a touch of sarcasm. "Ellen, do you honestly believe that?"

"Why, Mama, of course I do."

Mama put on her hat with decision. "Well, dear, if you won't open your eyes and see for yourself I can't help you any. But no person need tell me that Mike Dale is putting any money back into the business."

"Why, Mama, what—what do you mean?"

"If you're so blind, I won't tell you, Ellen. But you might look up that Hutton girl. No one has heard from her lately—oh has anyone? She isn't working, is she—then how is she living?"

An Unpleasant Hint.

"I—I thought she was traveling somewhere," Ellen faltered. "She—she had a legacy."

"Yes. Of a few hundred dollars. How long would that last the way she spent it last year? Well, Ellen, if you knew how Marjorie Hutton is making out you might have a better understanding of why Michael is always broke."

And Mama hurried away, only dimly realizing the heart-breaking tragedy she had left behind. For Mama herself was worried and feeling skeptical about all the men in the whole world.

He always wanted her to go to dinner with him—or to a picture show.

If the things Mama had hinted at were true then they might account in large measure for Michael's coldness. Day after day passed when Ellen scarcely saw Michael. A few minutes at the breakfast table with Ellen busy at the toaster and the electric grill while Michael buried his face behind the morning paper.

A little while at night. A quiet dinner. The unemotional, almost drab recital of the day. Maybe baby Michael had cut another tooth or played with a rattle or ventured a difficult word like "Ma—ma" or "Da—da."

After dinner the baby, all dewy from his later afternoon nap and pinky white in cleanliness, was brought into the living room for a few minutes' admiration of his parents. Sometimes Dr. John came in, and Mary, who just couldn't see the baby enough.

Then they would go home early, knowing that Ellen must tuck little Michael in bed and just a touch embarrassed to stay because in their well-bred way they detected that something was wrong, very wrong in the new household.

After they left Ellen would pick little Michael up into her arms, bidding him wave bye bye to Daddy and she would carry the baby off, hoping his father would come along. Perhaps, over the little crib, some of the long lost tenderness would creep back again.

Michael never followed. When she came back into the room an hour or so later, Michael would be dozing on the couch or enthralled in the reading of a new book. Gone forever, it seemed, was any joy in each other's society. The winter passed.

It was in late March that Marjorie Hutton came back to Fairhaven. Came with a determination written on her set, pretty lips that set all her friends to talking.

Court in Maryland Asked to Restrain Levy on Receipts

Suit Says Act to Raise Relief Funds Illegal, Discriminatory.

Merchants Given Order Citing State in Move for Injunction.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 21.—Maryland's only estblished means of raising revenue for relief needs—the 1 per cent gross receipts tax—was attacked in court today.

In the proceedings four Maryland merchants ask issuance of an injunction against State Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr., on the ground the act is unconstitutional and discriminatory.

The action also asks injunctions against the indorsement of the tax under the present interpretations of State tax authorities.

Circuit Court Judge J. Frank Supplee, jr., before whom the case was brought, signed an order requiring Comptroller Gordy to show cause by June 1, why an injunction should not be issued. Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, who will represent the State, had not been served with formal notice of the action today, but has conferred with attorneys for the plaintiffs and will file an answer for the State prior to June 1.

The suit alleged:

Points Cited.

That the exemptions of automobile sales under a special act taxing automobile purchasers and the further exemption of sales of gas, electricity, water and steam constitute an invalid and unconstitutional discrimination.

That the law, due to its "hybrid" character, is conflicting, inconsistent and unintelligible.

That it conflicts with and violates the fourteenth amendment of the United States Constitution and the fifteenth and twenty-third articles of the bill of rights of the Maryland constitution.

That the law represents "an attempt, under the guise of an occupational or license fee, to raise from one class only of the community a vast sum required to be raised from all the citizens of the entire State for so-called 'emergency relief'."

That the regulations for enforcement of the tax and reporting of accounts on which the tax is based are arbitrary acts by Comptroller Gord and are not provided for in the law.

That the law makes the tax a lien against all assets of merchants and will have the effect of making a permanent cloud on their title to real estate and other assets, whether used in their business or not.

In Annapolis today, Comptroller Gordy announced that receipts from the gross receipts levy and the automobile titling tax, both of which became effective April 1, have totaled $354,676.88. Of that amount, $295,363.57 came from the receipts levy and $59,313.31 from the titling tax.

Many Names Listed.

Complainants in the action were listed as: W. Groscup Jones, Salisbury grocer; John R. Fisher, Hagerstown grocer; James Lechert, Baltimore grocer, and the Remington Putnam Book Co., Baltimore. An exhibit containing names of between 1,800 and 2,000 other persons who were listed as "particpants in the litigation incident to emergency gross receipts tax act" was filed. It was indicated that they were chiefly members of the Retail Trade Association of Maryland, which has opposed the tax. The complaint itself stated that all those persons were ready to enter the case as complainants if the court desired, but had not been named to obviate great detail in listings upon court dockets.

If the tax should be held unconstitutional, it is regarded as inevitable that a special session of the General Assembly will be called at once to provide other means of raising revenue for relief. The Federal Government has announced it will not continue to contribute for relief if the State does not do its part.

According to the Bureau of Fisheries, the nearest in size was one caught in Wisconsin some years ago. It weighed 9¼ pounds.

Labor Scores Byrd, Glass As Its Foes

State Convention Flays Senators' Opposition to Social Bill.

Ickes Complimented for Maintaining PWA Hourly Scale.

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, Va., May 21.—Labor records of Senators Harry Byrd and Carter Glass were condemned today by the State Federation of Labor, in a resolution adopted without a dissenting vote at its fortieth annual convention.

"We strongly protest to these two Senators," the resolution said, "the unfairness and unreasonableness of their attitude" on New Deal legislation.

The resolution, introduced by R. K. Smith, Richmond printer, asserted in its preamble that "the records of Virginia's two Senators on measures of interest to labor coming before the Senate have been uniformly against the wishes and interests of the wage earner."

Showed No Interest.

Asserting that neither Byrd nor Glass had voted in favor of any important labor measures since March, 1933, the resolution said "the records of both these Senators prove conclusively that they have shown no interest in the welfare or security of wage earners."

Continuing, the resolution said that "opposition of these two Senators to the President's social security legislation has been conspicuous for its extreme bitterness, and, if successful, will not only seriously affect all workers, but has already reflected adversely on all the population of Virginia and prevents the full and free cooperation of Federal relief agencies with like agencies in Virginia."

Darden Criticism Tabled.

Two other resolutions of similar nature, one of them including Colgate W. Darden, jr., Representative from the Second Congressional District, in the criticism, were tabled by the convention after some delegates had pressed for passage of all three resloutions.

Action on the resolution came near the close of the convention, which, in its final minutes, sent a telegram to Secretary of the Interior Ickes complimenting him on his decision to maintain the PWA hourly wage scale on public works projects.

This was interpreted by the convention to mean that there had been a change in Federal policy during the day following the federation's protest to President Roosevelt on the new wage rates on PWA projects putting Virginia in the next to the lowest classification.

It is expected several indictments will result from the intensive investigation. Among those summoned to appear today were the entire staffs of Western Union Telegraph office and Chesapeake Potomac Telephone office here.

Nearly 100 Fredericksburg residents were examined. Two city councilmen and two high school students were among those questioned today.

Speakers Flay Banking Bill At Baltimore

Maryland Association Told Reserve System Imperiled.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., May 21.—A vigorous frontal attack on the omnibus banking bill now pending before Congress featured the opening session of the fortieth annual convention of the Maryland Bankers Association here today.

Condemning Title II of the banking bill in his annual address to the convention, Tasker G. Lowndes, president of the association, warned that "this section of the bill as written will place the Federal Reserve System in the hands of the politicians, and make it the football of whatever party happens to be in power, and will open the way to unlimited inflation and other evils too serious to contemplate."

A similar condemnation of the pending bill was uttered by Prof. Lewis H. Haney, of New York University, principal speaker at the session, who denominated it as "monetary socialism."

Warns of Political Seizure.

Comparing the situation now prevailing in the United States with conditions that existed in eighteenth century France, Prof. Haney told the Maryland bankers that if the omnibus banking bill became law the way would be opened for "political seizure of all of the assets of the Nation."

Directing much of his attack at Marriner S. Eccles, head of the Federal Reserve Board, the New York economist declared that "there is very little difference between the view held by Mr. Eccles and those which animated John Law, the Scotch gambler, who got the ear of Louis XV and wrecked France.

"Like the earlier Scotchman, Eccles now considers money to be nothing but credit and is an inflationist and flat-money man," Prof. Haney said.

Pair Compared Further.

"Like John Law, Mr. Eccles appears to believe that the best currency is arrived at by having the sovereign go into debt and using the evidences of debt as the medium of exchange.

"The two are alike in being financial adventurers who have a bank scheme for relieving the insolvency of sovereigns. Just as Louis XV grasped at Law's scheme, so Mr. Roosevelt's insolvent Administration grasps at the Eccles scheme for turning debt into money through the means of a political bank.

"To think that politicians can make business by loading a prostituted banking system with their deficits—this is the great delusion of the New Deal."

Declaring to members of the association that "the Nation has been harassed, hampered and harmed by governmental interference in affairs outside the essential field of Government activities," Mr. Lowndes, the retiring president, warned that the spending activities of the present Administration are "a bloodletting operation upon the wealth and capital of the Nation which discourages and deprives private capital from entering into new enterprises.

Labor Group Assails Scale on Works Pay

Md.-D. C. Federation Holds Wage Program Inimical to Worker.

Tydings Scored as Foe of Roosevelt, Resignation Is Demanded.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Salisbury, Md., May 21.—Predicting widespread discontent and strikes if the President's works relief wage scale announced yesterday prevails, the Maryland and District of Columbia Federation of Labor today unanimously adopted a resolution of protest.

The wage scale will "lower standards of living and destroy wage standards which organized workers have established for the betterment of humanity," the resolution declares. "These suggested wage rates will only lead to the enslavement of the unorganized workers and overwhelm them with debt and obligation which they will be forced to contract working for these un-American wage rates."

It further condemns the proposed wage as "un-American and inimical to the organized workers of this country and the prevailing rate of wages, which should be maintained."

The resolution was written by delegates of the building trades councils of Baltimore and Washington.

Tydings Attacked.

The resignation of United States Senator Millard E. Tydings was demanded in another resolution of the federation.

The senior Maryland Senator, declares the resolution, has pursued a policy of noncooperation with the National Administration, "consistently voted against every measure to improve the standards of our working men and women" and "by his reactionary policy does not represent the best interests of the people of the State of Maryland, who desire to co-operate with President Roosevelt."

A copy was ordered sent to President Roosevelt, Gov. Nice, Senator Tydings, President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, chairmen of the Democratic national and State central committees and heads of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Other resolutions adopted favored the 30-hour week without reduction in wages, two years extension of the NRA, the Wagner labor disputes bill now before Congress and unemployment and social insurance legislation and opposed child labor and war for profit.

Other Resolutions.

These were among approximately 50 resolutions on various subjects assigned to committees.

Joseph P. McCurdy, Baltimore, was unopposed for re-election as president of the federation. Also unopposed were Frank J. Coleman, Washington, for secretary, and J. E. Toone, Washington, for treasurer.

Invitations for the next annual convention were extended from Cumberland and Baltimore.

Other resolutions adopted opposed formation of company unions, advocated Maryland's ratification of child-labor amendment, urged preservation of all NRA codes for District of Columbia, pledged sincere co-operation with President Roosevelt, favored reduction of spirituous liquors importation tax, indorsed principle of a State NRA enabling act, advocated levying taxes for relief against "high income, inheritances, tax-free securities, luxuries, etc.;" opposed racial discrimination in labor unions, indorsed world labor unity against fascism, and favored amendment to District of Columbia workmen's compensation law to provide right of appeal to full commission, retaining privilege of further appeal to courts.

Urges Backing NRA.

Arthur E. Hungerford, State NRA compliance director, told the federation "it is unthinkable Congress will not extend the NRA." The federation was urged to "fight for NRA with your mind and vote."

The national recovery act has almost done away with sweatshops and child labor, has lowered bankruptcy and receiverships and the "little fellow is coming back," Hungerford said. "Ninety per cent of people affected in Maryland are playing fair with NRA," he asserted.

Trout at Hoover Camp Shun Bait Dangled by Gov. Peery

Virginia Executive Pauses to Fish on Tour of State Parks; Leaves for Washington to Press Work on Skyline Drive.

By the Associated Press.

Hoover Camp on the Rapidan, Va., May 21.—Even after a two-year absence of presidential bait, trout in the Rapidan here scoffed at worms offered them by the Governor of Virginia.

Gov. Peery came here today with the Conservation and Development Commission on their inspection tour of the new State park chain, and stopped for an hour's fishing at Hoover Camp en route to Douthat State Park, in Alleghany and Bath counties, the subject of tomorrow's inspection.

"I may not have caught any, but I'm 100 per cent—I didn't miss any," said the Governor.

After touring the Shenandoah National Park, with especial interest in the Skyline Drive, over which the party traveled, the Governor tonight left the inspection party to go to Washington to confer tomorrow "for the purpose of clearing up some details in the hope of pushing forward work on the Skyline Drive."

As the Governor stood atop the skyline drive he looked down upon the South Fork of the Shenandoah Valley on one side and Madison County on the other and said, "If that country has no value, the United States is broke."

Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, at a luncheon at Skyland, told of the acquisition of the park by the State and its development by the national Government, saying "he wanted to pay tribute to the chairman and other members of the present and the preceding conservation and development commissions, who were exceedingly cooperative in every phase of the job."

Heading into Douthat tonight from Fredericksburg, the party had left behind the coastal region, where they started Sunday, had crossed the Blue Ridge and were well into the Alleghenies for an inspection of a park given the State early in the State park program—third of the chain of six new State parks to be visited this week on the first official inspection.

The party traveled over the 34-mile section of the drive now completed with a temporarily surfaced road. This section, park service officials said, will be given its permanent surface beginning next week. Farther down, 30 miles more will be completed by September.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Members-elect from Roanoke who will be initiated at the annual exercises on June 10, are Richard Franklin Pense, Nicholas William Pugh, jr., George Henkle Reese and Raymond Neikirk Wilburn.

Other new Virginia members are Lewis Hinton Bosher, jr., of Richmond; Richard Aylett Cabell, of Charlottesville; Morton Mordecai Garfield, of Norfolk; William Stark Mundy, jr., of Lynchburg; David Rogers Owen, of Charlottesville; Melvin Ray Watson, of Lynchburg, and Murat Willis Williams, of Richmond.

Three from other States who won the society membership are Ernest Smith Clifton, of Florence, S. C.; Francis Davis Handy, of Baltimore, Md., and Vincent Mazzarella, of Port Chester, N. Y.

Dr. James Woods Price, of Saranac Lake, N. Y., who is regarded as one of the Nation's leading specialists in tuberculosis, was elected from the alumni. He was graduated from the University of Virginia medical school in 1901.

For the first time in several years, only students from the department of arts and sciences were considered for membership.

Beg Pardon.

A story in The Sunday Post under a Berryville, Va., date line which read "The contest for the treasurership of Clark County, in which W. A. Bradford, treasurer for 40 years, is seeking reelection has developed into the outstanding battle of the current Democratic primary campaign" has been reported in error due to the omission of one word. The sentence should have read "is not seeking reelection." As correctly stated in the article, there are six candidates for the post, John O. Hardesty, Benjamin Crampton, Jetson F. Spates, W. D. Burtner, George R. Green and Rice W. Levi. The Post regrets the omission which inadvertently changed the text of the story.

Liquor Trial Defense May Open Monday

Total of 153 Witnesses Heard to Date in Roanoke Testimony.

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., May 21.—The defense of alleged Franklin County liquor conspirators, including Commonwealth's Attorney C. C. Lee, upon whom the Government turned its guns last week, will probably begin Monday, it was indicated here tonight.

After an afternoon conference in chambers with prosecutors and a battery of defense lawyers, Judge John Paul said that he would permit the defense to wait until Monday to begin its presentation. Meanwhile it was uncertain—while the ten defense attorneys considered their regimen—whether the Government would rest Thursday or Friday after lengthy cross-examination of Tom C. Cundiff, witness No. 138 and the second to directly link Lee with payments of alleged "protection" money.

Corroborating portions of Cundiff's testimony, his wife, son, and friend and two Negro farm hands—one of whom said the farming including whisky-making—testified this afternoon, bringing to 153 the number of witnesses.

Mrs. Cundiff, the fifth woman witness thus far, said that Eugene Robertson, Franklin County jailer, had told her that if her husband would sign a statement branding his Franklin County Circuit Court room declarations that he had paid Lee "protection" money as untrue, Cundiff could leave jail and "go home." She identified a photostat of the statement Cundiff had said he turned over to Federal officers.

She denied that she had signed papers sending her husband to Marion Hospital and said that Lee had been a visitor at the Cundiff home near Penhook, where barrels of liquor were stored.

Furniture Merchants To Meet in Richmond

Richmond, Va., May 21 (AP).—Retail furniture merchants from Virginia, North and South Carolina will convene here tomorrow for the association's annual two-day conclave. Approximately 250 delegates are expected.

Chief speaker at the morning session will be B. J. Flynn, of Washington, director of the public relations division of the Federal Housing Administration.

BIG GAME FISHERMEN NEED a HARPOON and POWER BOAT
You Need Only a
Table at Olmsted's
In catching large fish, such as swordfish, sportsmen must have a power boat with high observation tower and a platform over the prow. An observer watches for large game fish from the tower while the boat cruises slowly about. Finally, when the quarry is sighted the observer directs the vessel within range and the harpooner hurls his weapon into the fish.
For luscious big-game fish or tangy, small seafood dishes you need only a table at Olmsted's.

State G.O.P. Gives Weller Party Honor

Central Group Praises Gov. Nice in Meeting at Baltimore.

Executive Asserts Merit System Will Be Closely Followed.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, May 21.—Ovington E. Weller, chairman of the State public service commission and former United States Senator, today was selected as the new Republican national committeeman for Maryland.

He succeeds Phillips Lee Goldsborough, former Governor and former United States Senator, who resigned upon becoming director of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Weller's name was the only one considered by the Republican State central committee although it had been understood that the name of John W. Garrett, former Ambassador to Italy, was being considered. The committee's recommendation will be forwarded to Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican national committee, who is expected to name Weller as the Maryland representative on the national body.

Nice Praised.

Gov. Harry W. Nice attended the meeting as a spectator—he is not a member of the committee—and heard adopted a resolution praising his administration for having redeemed 11 campaign promises during four months.

Among the redeemed pledges named in the resolution were old-age pensions, recognition of women in appointments to public office and legislation in behalf of the Negro population.

The Governor, in an unscheduled speech, told the committe that the "last four months have not been the easiest I have ever spent," and added:

"This patronage question is, as it always has been, a serious matter. After all, this is a Republican administration and officers appointed under this administration are going to be Republicans.

Charges "Handpicking."

"The merit system in this State has been dealt with most loosely in the last four years. Appointments have been handpicked and the merit system evaded.

"I have no desire to destroy or undermine the merit system, but where officers are not under the system, Republicans are going in those places * * *

"Instead of destruction or the merit system, I mean to apply it as it was drawn to be applied. From now on, our people are going to have the same opportunity to pass these examinations and when they are passed they are going to get the appointments."

Warner Brothers Join Publishers in Quest of New Novel That Will Be Filmable

Fabulous Prize Offered Author Writing Winner

Is an All-Nations Contest; Midnight Tickets Ready; Amusement Jottings.

Reprinted from yesterday's last edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

There has come to hand from Mitchell Rawson, of the New York home office of Warner Brothers-First National Pictures, a note reading, in part, as follows:

"I enclose details of the All-Nations Prize Novel Competition in which Warner Bros.-First National Pictures are participating with Farrar & Rinehart, the Literary Guild of America, the Oxford University Press (Toronto), Ivor Nicholson & Watson, of London, and publishers in France, Spain, Hungary, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Germany.

"This competition, the first and most extensive of its kind, will be of interest, we think, to yourself and to your readers."

Having examined with some care the considerable brochure and entrance blank accompanying Mr. Rawson's letter, I am inclined to agree with him that those who have the great American novel packed away in an attic trunk will be eager to dust it off and send it along to Eric S. Pinker & Adrienne Morrison, Inc., 9 East Forty-sixth street, New York City, who are managing the contest in this country for the associated publishers.

Some Handsome Awards.

I am prompted to this view by the further announcement that for the American book rights, Farrar & Rinehart, Inc., will pay $5,000 on account of a royalty of 15 per cent; the Literary Guild of America, for book club rights, $3,000 outright; Warner Brothers-First National, for motion picture right, $2,500, as an option on the world motion picture rights, with a minimum payment of $15,000 and a maximum payment of $25,000; Oxford University Press, Toronto, for Canadian book rights, $500 on account of a royalty of 10 per cent to 1,000 copies; 15 per cent thereafter.

Similar contributions to the sum total of a staggering first prize are to be made by representative publishers in all of the foreign countries named.

Rules and Regulations.

There are, of course, certain rules and regulations governing the contest that are too voluminous for reproduction in this space. They may be obtained, one assumes, from the interested sponsors already named hereinabove.

Having linked itself with the living stage as a joint sponsor of dramatic material adaptable to the cinema, the motion picture industry—at least that part of it controlled by the Warner Brothers—now seems to be aligning itself in like manner with the publishing business with an identical end in view. Not a bad idea.

Tickets already have been placed on sale for the special Thursday midnight public preview showing of Mae West's new picture, "Goin' to Town." They may be purchased at the box-office of the Palace Theater, Thirteenth and F streets. It will be recalled that the last time a Mae West midnight preview was offered, the Palace was packed to the last inch of standing-room and Loew's Fox Theater threw open its doors and accommodated an overflow that comfortably filled the spacious auditorium and mezzanine of the Captial's largest picture house. Buying tickets in advance for Thursday night's event will comfortably preclude the near-riot that occurred the last time, when seemingly all of Washington wanted to secure tickets within the last quarter-hour before the screening of the film actually began.

Shoutings and Tumults.

Probably no play attempted by any local producing group has required so many sound effects as "The Ghost Train," which the Pierce Hall Players will present in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest, tomorrow and Thursday nights.

So complicated are the noises, commotions and off-stage rackets and so perfectly must they be synchronized with the action of the melodrama, that the stage crew—Kenn Romney and his assistants—are compelled to rehearse with the cast of principals.

"The Ghost Train" has been staged under the direction of George Farrington. It will be the final offering of the Pierce Hall Players' current season.

Nova Pilbeam, the 14-year-old English lassie, who has made such a deep impression in the role of Felicity in "Little Friend," at the Belasco, has been signed by Gaumont-British to a long-term contract on the strength of her performance in this picture. Today is the last day it is being shown on Lafayette Square. It will be supplanted tomorrow by "The Unfinished Symphony," the story of Franz Schubert.

Changes in Tour.

Katharine Cornell, en route for a summer vacation in Europe, lets it be known that she has added Madison, Wis.; Jackson, Miss.; Shreveport and New Orleans, La.; Birmingham, Ala., and Atlanta, Ga., to her tour in "Romeo and Juliet" next fall.

She will not appear in St. Joseph, Mo., or Topeka, Kans., no theater being available for her use in either city—an unfortunate circumstance that she encountered now and again during her Nation-wide road tour last year.

With benefit performances still fresh in the minds of local theatergoers, it is interesting that prior to her departure on the Ile de France for abroad, Miss Cornell contributed $72 to the Actors' Fund of America, Inc., of which Daniel Frohman is president. This sum recently accrued to the American theater's "first lady" from the sale of her autographed photographs to admirers scattered all over the country.

Miss Cornell assesses a charge of 50 cents for each such picture and contributes all of the proceeds from this source to the Actors' Fund.

Tonight, unless recent plans have been altered at the last minute, Earl Carroll will open his new "Sketch Book" in Philadelphia. The premiere already has been postponed once or twice, but a cordial note from F. E. Crosman, urging me to be present at tonight's opening leads me to believe that it actually is coming off—or rather, going on—this time. It is a matter of sore regret that circumstances that are wholly out of control render it impossible for me to accept Mr. Crosman's invitation.

Features of Festival.

The Fox Theater Music Week Festival, inaugurated yesterday, today presents three popular children's choruses and the men's glee club of the University of Maryland. The children's groups are the boy's and girl's glee clubs of Eliot Junior High School and the children's chorus from Thompson and Gordon Community Centers.

Miss Hannah Bonnell directs the two Eliot clubs; they boys appearing at 12:10 and the girls at 3 p. m. Miss Esther Linkins will direct the 50 young singers from the two community Centers.

Harlan Randall will conduct the Maryland University men at 8:35 p. m. All of this, of course takes place on the stage of Lowe's Fox Theater in addition to the regular stage and screen programs.

A cordial note from Ruth Abbott, former leading woman of the National Theater Players and a last-week visitor in the Capital, brings these interesting tidings to her friends in Washington: "I had no intention of leaving Washington without calling you or dropping in to see you. However, I had a message from Mr. Brady, jr., about a part in a new play which he will try out in Diehl, N. J., in July, so I rushed back to New York. It's a newspaper play, called 'Jane Brady, Editor,' and is quite a good one. Mr. Brady expects to try out about eight new ones, if he can find that many. Here's hoping. Perhaps out of the group he will find a hit and I will find a part."

"Here's hoping!" about says it all, Ruth.

A Revolving Roadside!

The Roadside Theater's ambition to have the stage in its new barn theater, out on the Rockville pike, thoroughly modern in every respect, seems to be on a fair way to fulfillment, with the construction of three circular revolving stages, each one 12 feet in diameter, to facilitate scene shifting.

Two of the huge discs have already been built by the Roadside crew since moving out to the barn last Saturday. Each stage will revolve on a central pivot, like a turn-table, and the three will be placed in clover-leaf fashion on stage right, left and center. This is a device that will make possible the changing of scenes almost within the time of the opening and closing of the curtains.

If you remember "Dodsworth," starring Walter Huston, at the National, you will appreciate what an advantage this is.

Mae West's new picture, concerning which there has been so much to-do, "Goin' to Town," is being screened for the dramatic desks this afternoon at 1:15 o'clock. I understand the projection room is being lined with asbestos!

Retort Courteous Note.

When Mae West was making the horseback sequences for "Goin' to Town," out on the Paramount Ranch, she admonished her steed not to get rough. And what did he say?

"Neigh, West!"

That is, he did whinnie thought of it!

Is Appearing in Her First Film

With cold self-assurance she rules the fabulous Kingdom of Kor, in RKO-Radio's screen adaptation of H. Rider Haggard's novel, "She," thus refuting the ancient saw about how "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." This austerely lovely young woman is Helen Gahagan. "She" is the first picture for which she has ever consented to desert the dramatic and operatic stages. In private life, Miss Gahagan is the wife of Melvyn Douglas, equally known on stage and screen.

Maugham Play Is Revived by Its First Star

Ethel Barrymore Is Guest Here in 'Constant Wife' at the National.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE CONSTANT WIFE." S. E. Cochran presents Ethel Barrymore and the National Theater Players in the play in three acts by W. Somerset Maugham. Directed by Karl Nielsen; setting by Charles Squire.

Miss Ethel Barrymore, one of the American theater's most distinguished exponents of scintillant and brittle drawing-room comedy, last evening in the National Theater revived one of the most telling creations of her stellar career in the role of Constance Middleton in W. Somerset Maugham's pithy, rather daring and persistently epigrammatic play of "The Constant Wife."

In so doing, Miss Barrymore attracted the largest and most brilliant first-night audience of the current "little season" of the National Theater Players—with whose regular personnel she appeared as guest star—and upon the conclusion of the final act elicited a volume of applause that occasioned an uncounted number of curtain calls.

"The Constant Wife" deals frankly, cleverly and dramatically with the delicate topic of domestic moral codes, adds a vague suggestion of Sir James Matthew Barrie's "The Twelve-Pound Look," and ends upon a high, ringing note that is as joyously hilarious as it is revelatory of how completely putty vainglorious men are in the shrewd hands of intelligent and perceptive women—especially if they are beautiful women in the bargain!

Explodes Bombshell.

Miss Barrymore, in the title role, assumes an utterly counterfeit ignorance of the affair her husband is having with her "best friend." The husband of this fluttery creature who has intrigued the interest of John Middleton, famous surgeon, explodes the double infidelity as something of a bombshell in the comfortably filled living room in the Middleton home, where all of those involved in the action are conveniently assembled to hear it.

From this point on, the comedy becomes a subtle exposition of the method a clever wife adopted to recover the love of the husband to whom she had been married 15 years, after 5 of which love had died between them, although the utmost friendship and affection had survived.

The play is one exclusively of dialogue. The action is limited virtually to the moving from chair to chair and changing stage positions by those who are delivering Maugham's pungent, penetrating and provocative speeches. While the drawing room comedy never approaches the broad strokes of farce, it frequently becomes intensely amusing.

Star Plays Deliberately.

The guest star last evening seemed a little more deliberate in method than is her wont, but, nevertheless, brought back to the part she created in 1927 the full measure of significant marital philosophy, feminine intuition and personal charm it has always possessed when she has played it.

The supporting National Players for the most part gave excellent accounts of themselves under circumstances that may possibly have created a slightly greater degree of self-consciousness than they usually feel.

Roy Roberts, as the former sweetheart of Constance Middleton, still desperately in love with her, and Raymond Bramley, in the role of the erring husband who recognized him only as a "threat," played with fine spirit and in the proper tempo are perhaps the "fattest" roles they have had this season. Ruth Lee, as the peculiarly ingenuous "best friend," contributed one of her customary letter-perfect performances, executed with crispness, assurance and splendid effectiveness.

In the Lesser Parts.

Adelaide Hibbard, as a Victorian mother; Forrest Orr, as the butler, and Karl Nielsen, the director, in the comparatively minor role of the outraged husband—whom the "constant wife" made believe he was not—did their tasks efficiently. Added to the acting ensemble this week are Maude Howell Smith and Edith Speare, as two garrulous ladies of contrasted viewpoints who do their futile best to "spill the beans," in a manner of speaking.

The single setting by Charles Squire is one of such "big season" completeness and good taste that it earned its round of applause the instant the first curtain had risen last night, thus auspiciously inaugurating one of the Miss Barrymore's and the Players' most notable evenings in the theater.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

The Washington Composers Club presents the National String Quintet, assisted by Helen Howinson, soprano, in a program of chamber music in the Phillips Memorial Gallery. Program: Suite for String Quartet (John Alden Finckel); "Prelude in Dorian Mode" and "Orientale" for violin and piano (Henry Gregor); "Kazak Cradle Song" and "Mistress Mine" for soprano voice and string quartet (Mary Howe); Pianoforte Quintet in F minor (Cesar Franck).

At the public concerts of the Washington Composers' Club, one is always rewarded with the pleasant experience of adventure, for the program is certain to lead one into strange territory. There are two kinds of adventure, each having its adherents—adventure among familiar masterpieces in search of fresh discoveries, and adventure among new works with every sense alert for encounter with the unexpected. The latter kind has its particular appeal to the exploring and curious mind.

Last night's disclosures of novelties by resident composers were all interesting. The suite by Mr. Finckel, entitled "Moods," contained subjective music, somewhat discursive in manner as a monologue of this type is apt to be. To the composer, these moods expressed emotional shades which he designated tender, dubious, sombre and content. At a first hearing, one does not respond instantly to those exact evocations, and the work takes on the aspect of a quartet of which the "dubious" mood is the diverting scherzo. Putting aside the titles, the suite is good absolute music, with the thematic material well handled.

Mr. Gregor is an experimenter who seldom fails to hold one's attention with his harmonic combinations. His essay in the Dorian mode is completely successful, so nostalgic in its accents as to make one wish that he would write a series of studies in all the modes. The "Orientale" is refreshingly free from the conventionalities that so frequently pass under that name.

Mrs. Howe's two songs are charmingly melodic, thoroughly atmospheric, and finished in workmanship. They were delightfully sung by Helen Howinson, who uses tonal delicacies artistically.

Those who prefer adventure among masterpieces had their turn in the concluding work on the program. Yet the F minor quintet of Franck is so rarely heard that it came almost as a novelty. It is a splendid composition, rich in spiritual implications and surcharged with that exalted mysticism which was the essence of Franck's nature. The performers gave it an eloquent reading, and one commends especially the fine tone of Alice Finckel in the piano part.

The string players on this occasion were Henri Sokolov, Alex Levin, George Wargo and John Alden Finckel. Mr. Wargo substituted for the quartet's regular viola player, Samuel Feldman, who has been temporarily incapacitated by an accident.

Shareholders Contest Liability Assessment

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., May 21.—A demurrer to the allegations by which the State banking commissioner, John J. Ghingher, is attempting to collect stockholders' liability assessments in connection with the defunct Central Trust Co. was filed in the circuit court yesterday by James H. Allender, Westminster, who holds ten shares of the stock.

Mr. Allender contends Mr. Ghingher's bill of complaint fails to show that the court has jurisdiction over him. He alleges that he is not a citizen of Frederick County, but of Carroll County.

Charles T. Culler, of Frederick, also filed an answer to the bill of complaint. He contends that at the time he subscribed for the stock he was under 21 and not capable of making a valid deed or contract.

Expressing themselves as pleased with the cooperation the various officials gave while the audit was being made, the auditors announced their report soon will be released from Richmond. While in this section, Mr. Carnifax set up a system of uniform accounting for Berryville.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Watching Them Make Pictures.

Hollywood, May 21.

IN "The Broadway Melody" one of the principal characters is a Broadway columnist. Always anxious to see what a Broadway columnist looks like, I hurry to the small newspaper office on the set. There, sitting at a desk, is Jack Benny, looking very much like the Jack Benny who used to play the Palace, only he appears to be more of a juvenile. They have given him a grand make-up. I stand by and listen, for Benny is talking about columnists. He says to Director Roy Del Ruth: "I don't know. The line doesn't read right. I tell you columnists don't talk like that. Say, I know how columnists talk. Some of my best enemies are columnists."

* * * *

Benny gets ready to play the scene, and in his office with him is his chief informer and stooge, Snooper, played by Sid Silvers. Silvers wears eyeglasses, which are small field glasses, and enable him to peep into bedrooms a block away and get the columnist items. Silvers doesn't wear any makeup when working a flicker, because he claims he never knows when he may have to make a dash for freedom, and without make-up the getaway will be quicker. Benny and Silver rehearse the sequence, and when they finish, Jack says to Director Del Ruth: "I don't want to use the word gossip. It's too corny. I'd like to use a new word." A new word for gossip! They were still trying to get it when I left an hour later.

* * * *

BUDDY ROGERS is endeavoring to make a genuine comeback in flickers in the musical "Old Man Rhythm," now being filmed at Radio. Buddy is now 31 years of age; he has broadened and matured. When he made his last picture, the Independent produced "Take a Chance," he weighed 160 pounds. He now weighs 180 pounds. The extra weight seems to be an advantage. Buddy appears more solid, more like a regular guy you could count on in a pinch. The fact that he was dubbed "America's boy friend" in the beginning of his career hurt him later. Perhaps his appearance will help him to overcome that slogan now. He is cast as a collegiate again, but there are manly college students.

Buddy wasn't working in this particular sequence, so I can't say if his acting has improved. They would have you believe, however, that his several years of trouping as an orchestra leader and appearing before audiences have given him an experience and confidence he needed.

* * * *

"Old Man Rhythm" is described as a "modernistic college story," and this particular sequence was the interior of a bus filled with the students on their way to the college. This scene serves to introduce the characters, for as the bus rolls along each character stands and sings a snappy verse to the ditty titled, "You've Got to Have a College Education." This is a very amusing song, and there are some very talented boys and girls getting their big screen opportunity. Among them is Johnny Mercer, of Paul Whiteman's orchestra. Johnny wrote the lyrics, and he should go far in pictures. There are gals. Joy Hodges, of Jimmy Grier's orchestra, and Evelyn Poe, of the Paradise Club. Miss Poe is definitely a screen find.

* * * *

ALSO working in this picture is Dave Chasen. Dave is now doing that slow arc movement with the hand in front of the face that he did for Joe Cook, with Eric Blore. Director Edward Ludwig had to ask the electricians to stop laughing; you see, they had never seen Chasen before.

This Evelyn Poe was a good breath of Midnight Broadway to me. She strictly had pep and the lingo of that street. It was good to hear some one talk that way again.

So, Evelyn Poe of the Broadway night life comes to Hollywood, and what happens? They discover that she is only 17 years old, and therefore she must have a teacher with her on the set. Miss Poe must have a guardian to protect her and teach her. It is time to go to school, and Evelyn Poe leaves, saying: "Well, so long. I gotta go and make with the books."

30 States Levy 125 Millions In New Taxes

$200,000,000 Total Seen When 14 Legislatures in Session Act.

By the United Press.

Chicago, Ill.—Taxpayers of 30 States in which Legislatures have met and adjourned since January 1 will pay approximately $125,000,000 in new taxes next year for one of the biggest treasure hunts in American peace-time history.

Before the remaining 14 bodies of lawmakers now in session depart sine die—probably about November 1—the sum of new State levies easily will pass $200,000,000.

New taxes imposed in the last four months average slightly more than $1.50 per capita annually in the 30 States whose Legislatures have adjourned. The bill for each actual taxpayer will be considerably higher.

West Virginia Exception.

Figures gathered by 44 State capital bureaus of the United Press reveal that only West Virginia, of all the 44 States in which Legislatures met this year, will pay less taxes next year than in the fiscal season just passed. Repeal of the State's gross income tax and amendments to other revenue laws will save West Virginians about $1,000,000 a year.

New Yorkers will be called on to rustle the largest sum of new taxes next year—$51,150,000. That's $3.92 per capita.

South Dakota's 705,000 residents were hit hardest by their money-seeking legislators. An increase of approximately $3,000,000 a year in the State tax bill will cost each person in the State about $8.50.

Legislators generally tried to divide equitably between those of high and low incomes the burden of new taxes. Retail sales taxes were enacted or increased in 10 States, but lawmakers of nine States shifted some of the load to the larger income brackets through amendment of income tax laws.

29 Have Sales Tax.

States adopting a sales tax, bringing the number of commonwealths imposing that form of levy to 29, include: Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Washington, South Dakota, Wyoming, Maryland and North Dakota. Ohio's Legislature passed a sales tax at the session immediately preceding its recent meeting.

Several other assemblies still in session probably wil increase present sales taxes or enact new ones. In Illinois, notably, Gov. Henry Horner is attempting to gain approval of an increase which would produce $36,000,000 in new money annually.

Relief which no longer can be financed by bond issues will account for most of the money to be gained in new taxes. School funds and old age pensions, enacted or increased in concession to the wide clamor by adherents of the Townsend plan, will get most of the balance.

Griffith Buys Newsom for $50,000; Sees Nats in Pennant Fight

Browns' Ace Is Obtained For Cash

This Season's Failure of Speed-Ball Hurler Is Discounted.

'He's Man Harris Asked for,' Says Owner of Local Club.

By Shirley L. Povich.

CLARK GRIFFITH answered his critics yesterday by completing a trade which brought to his Washington ball club Pitcher Buck Newsom from the St. Louis Browns in what the Nats' owner declared was a $50,000 cash deal.

In parting with one-fifth of the $250,000 he received from the Red Sox last winter in the Joe Cronin deal, Griffith acquired in Newsom a colorful 26-year-old right-hander of the workhorse type who ranked third among the league's pitchers in strikeouts last season.

Newsom's record thus far this year has been far from impressive. He has failed to win any of his seven starts for the Browns, but Griffith still regards him as one of the league's outstanding hurlers, pointing out that ragged support and the failure of the lowly Browns to score runs for him cost Newsom several victories.

Won 16 Games.

Counted among the game's eccentrics, Newson is a voluble sort who was hailed as a fresh busher when he broke into the big leagues in 1932, but his clever pitching for the Browns has earned him the respect of the league's hitters. With a sixth-place club in 1934, Newsom won 16 games and lost 20. His wind-up, a contortionate affair that resembles a cross between an old Dutch windmill and an Indian club act, is watched with great glee by the fans.

Newson relies on his fast ball for his effectiveness and is rated behind Lefty Gomez, of the Yankees, and Tom Bridges, of the Tigers, as the ranking speed-ball pitcher of the league.

Griffith dismissed as unimportant the fact that Newsom has failed to win a game this season in his seven starts. The deal with the Browns completed early yesterday, the silver-thatched owner of the Nats settled back in his Griffith Stadium office and, as if feeling entitled to a few observations after his $50,000 outlay, declared that Newsom would put his back-sliding Nats back into the thick of the pennant race.

Envisions Pennant.

"Newsom's record doesn't disturb me," said Griffith. "I know he is a great pitcher. Those games he has been losing were not his fault. Do you know that the Browns didn't score a run for him in his last five starts? You can't hold that against a pitcher.

"He's the kind of a pitcher that Bucky Harris needs. One who can take a regular turn and throw some fear into the opposition with that fast ball he's got.

"I had to go high for Newsom, but he was the pitcher I wanted—the man Bucky Harris asked for. Bucky thinks he can win the pennant with better pitching and I think we can too. Look at the standings. With all the atrocious ball we have been playing, we're only five games out of the lead. That ought to mean something.

"It means, as far as I'm concerned, that there's no club in the league that's real hot. We don't have much to beat, and if we're only five games behind after the way we've been kicking ball games away, we can go to the front if the club hits any kind of a stride."

Negotiating Months.

Criticized for his failure to strengthen the team after receiving $250,000 from the Red Sox in the Joe Cronin deal, Griffith revealed that he had been attempting to purchase Newsom from the Browns since last winter, without success. Fifty thousand was the Browns' first price, after Griffith's huge profit on the Cronin deal was reported, and Simmons, Radcliff Hit for the Circuit as Lyons Wins 4th Game.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, May 21.—With Al Simmons and Ray Radcliff hitting home runs, Ted Lyons, veteran right-hander, turned in his fourth victory of the year for the Chicago White Sox today as the league leaders defeated the New York Yankees, 3 to 2, to square the series at one-all.

For five innings Lyons and young Vito Tamulis hooked up in a scoreless pitching duel, the White Sox veteran allowing only three hits and the Yankee youngster one less.

In the sixth, the Sox found the range. With one out, Radcliffe dropped a double in left field, Manager Jimmie Dykes flied out, but Al Simmons crashed through with his fourth homer of the season to put the league leaders in front. Simmons' blow broke a string of 16 consecutive scoreless innings for the rookie southpaw.

Cronin Batting Seventh as Sox Win

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, May 21.—Manager Joe Cronin dropped himself to seventh place in the Boston Red Sox batting order today and paved the way for a 7-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians by belting out a triple with two on base on his first trip to the plate.

Cronin's triple off Willis Hudlin, the first of the three Cleveland hurlers in the action, scored Rick Ferrell and Carl Reynolds. The Boston manager counted when Lefty Fritz Ostermueller knocked out the first of two lusty singles.

play of $2,098 and resulted in a mutuel of $57.20 to those who held the two-seven combination of Small Change in the first race and Amasin a Maryland half-mile, track drew a in the third. The "doubles" ranged from $7 on Small Change and Arctic Land to $314.70 on the combinations ending with Landslip and Red Commander.

The Bond brothers' influence dominated the running of the first race. Small Change, owned by Bernard Bond and trained by J. B. Bond, led from start to finish to score by six lengths over Dear Ann, a long-shot. Third, and ten lengths from the leader, came Girdles. Small Change's ability was no secret and he went to the post as an even money favorite to win like a 1-100 shot despite running out at the first turn. Dear Ann, paying $44.50 to place, came from far back to be second. Jockey Bryson rode the winner which paid a $3.70 mutuel.

Last Signal Is Victor.

The field in the second race looked like cattle as Starter Welter awaited an alignment. When the break came, Last Signal hopped to the front to stay. Schley B., handled by Jockey Palumbo, made repeated efforts to catch the flying leaders but was second. Most Always was weakly ridden and almost took second money on his own courage. Jockey Vinnie Wisner rode Last Signal and it was his second straight winner. The pay off was $9.30.

Amasin, a son of St. James, scored a surprise victory in the third and completed the $57.20 daily double. Capably ridden by Jockey Booker, Amasin won in a stretch duel with Pollydee. Tell It, taken to the outside all the way, finished third. The winner paid $18.20.

Upsets marked the remaining three races with the fifth going to Black Dreams, the sixth to Post Brigade and the final to Bendromel.

ST. ANNES-ON-THE-SEA, England, May 21.—Shaking off the blight which attacked his game yesterday, William Lawson Little, jr., came back with a roar today in the second round of the British amateur golf championship to blast former Champion Eric Martin-Smith out of the running, 4 and 3, and once again established himself the overwhelming favorite to retain the title—a feat accomplished only twice in the 50 years of the tournament.

Where nightfall yesterday, following his ragged 1-up victory over an obscure player, found the galleryites sadly shaking their heads predicting his early demise, tonight witnessed only a wild and enthusiastic rush to jump on the husky champion's bandwagon. No one of the gallery of approximately 2,000, which watched him shoot even fours at Smith for the 15 holes their match lasted, could picture his defeat at the hands of any player left in the field.

Dazzling Game.

With the defeated Jock McLean, the Scottish idol who was the victim of a first round upset, standing behind him offering advice and Henry Cotton, British open king, in the gallery, Little from the start played almost the same dazzling game which marked his sensational 14-to-13 victory over Jim Wallace in the final of the 1934 championship at Prestwick.

The curly-haired San Francisco bombardier made several mistakes, even missing a putt under 2 feet, but they were more than counterbalanced by a long string of holes where he was putting for birdies after accurately-gauged, pin-splitting approaches of the long and short variety. With a fair share of luck with his putter he could have been at least five strokes lower and would have threatened the course record of 68. On the last three holes he had putts of from 7 to 10 feet

Cards-Phils Halt Play To Fight

'Dizzy' Dean Escorted From Field by Police as Phils Win, 7-6.

Paul Dean's Use of 'Bean' Ball Causes Riot in Fourth Inning.

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, May 21.—A series of belligerent moves by players of both teams which featured today's National League baseball game between Philadelphia and the world champion Cardinals ended, at least temporarily, when Dizzy Dean, star St. Louis pitcher, was escorted from the players' bench by a police detail.

The Phillies won, 7 to 6. Paul Dean, one of three Cardinal hurlers to see action, was credited with his third loss of the season.

After a steady exchange of jibes between the rival pitchers, Coach Hans Lobert, of the visitors, accused Paul Dean of deliberately throwing a "bean ball" at Lou Chiozza. Dizzy ran from the players' bench to his brother as the latter dropped his glove and took a fighting pose. This was in the fourth inning.

Play Is Resumed.

Others players from both teams hurried to the immediate scene but the field was cleared and play resumed.

In the fifth inning, Paul Dean hit Todd with a pitched ball. The Philadelphia catcher threw down his bat and rushed toward Paul, who walked in to meet him. Pepper Martin hurried from third base and held Todd while numerous players of both teams tried to land a punch.

Dizzy then departed for the clubhouse and play again started.

Coach Lobart was ordered off the field in the sixth when he ran in protesting that "Spud" Davis, Cardinal backstop, was stepping out of the catcher's box too quickly. In the latter half of the inning Charley Gelbert batted for Paul Dean, who left the game.

Linke Faces St. Louis Today As Harris Changes Schedule

MANAGER BUCKY HARRIS last night announced a change in his pitching program against the Browns in the final game of the series today. The right-handed Ed Linke, originally scheduled to face the St. Louis club, will be withheld for a turn against the White Sox, and the left-handed Earl Whitehill will go on the mound today.

Harris is of the opinion that the White Sox, with their array of right-handed sluggers, will not take too kindly to right-hand pitching.

Buck Newsom, purchased from the Browns yesterday, will make his debut on the mound for the Nats tomorrow in the opening game of the series with Chicago. Linke will pitch on Thursday.

Yesterday's game with the Browns was postponed with wet grounds as the official excuse. The Washington management, fearing it might rain during the afternoon, called the game off early, thus paving the way for a more profitable doubleheader in July.

Fairsickle, Long Shot, Captures Feature at Rockingham Park

Filly Is Victor In Blanket Finish

Cohort Miss and Moralist Press Winner in $1,500 Event.

By the Associated Press.

ROCKINGHAM PARK, Salem, N. H., May 21.—Mrs. W. C. Weant's four-year-old bay filly, Fairsickle, a decided long shot, won the New York Press handicap, feature race, here today, and with it the $1,500 purse.

Only five horses paraded to the post—Cohort Miss, the favorite at 2 to 1; Moralist, 5 to 2; Sand Baby, 3 to 1; and Guapito, 4 to 1.

Fairsickle, 8 to 1 outsider, was always there or thereabouts. She trailed Moralist, who set the pace, from the start of the mile and one-eighth grind, and then moved into the lead at the head of the home stretch.

Stage Blanket Finish.

Cohort Miss came fast up the stretch on the outside, and Moralist, Bill Gallagher's 5-year-old campaigner, also made a bid, and the three of them staged a blanket finish, with Fairsickle having just enough energy left to push out her nose and win by that slender margin. Cohort Miss was only a head in front of Moralist, in one of the most frantic finishes of the meeting.

Jockey F. Faust, up on the winner, did a splendid job. Fairsickle paid $18.50 for a $2 win ticket.

Jockey Carl Hanford, who was up on Cohort Miss, scored the first "triple" of the meeting, winning the first race on the Flankman, the third on Squeeze Out, and the fifth on High Hand II.

The latter, under reserve while in pursuit of the pace, moved up on the outside leaving the back stretch, responded gamely in the stretch but was unable to get up in time. MORALIST took command at the pace, was raced along under slight restraint and withstood determined bids from the winner. SAND BABY was never prominent in an even effort. GUAPITO was away slowly.

SPEEDMORE took command in the run to the first turn, drew clear when straightening out in the back stretch, surrendered the lead briefly when reaching the stretch but came again and outlasted HUG AGAIN at the end. HUG AGAIN, reserved early, assumed a short advantage in the stretch but was unable to catch the winner. NOCTURNLABE was a prominent factor. TAUNTON, taken in hand until midway of the back stretch, moved up steadily on the outside, closing ground.

McKee's 71 Leads First-Day Qualifiers in Manor Invitation Golf

Burnett's 73 Is Next as 200 Play

Stevinson Is Third With 74; Additional Stars Compete Today.

By Dave Herman.

CRAIG McKEE, lanky Indian Spring golfer, shot a 71, one over par, yesterday to set the pace for a first-day qualifying field of 200 in the Manor Club invitation tournament.

A native of Iowa and a senior at George Washington University, McKee carded an even par 35 on the wooded first nine, and took 36 blows coming home, with a 5 on the home hole, cracking his hopes of leveling par for the day.

Another Indian Spring entry, Volney Burnett, went into temporary possession of second place by virture of his 36-37—73.

Third on the list was Miller B. Stevinson, Columbia's "war horse," who scored a 38-36—74. Dame Fortune, wasn't particularly kind to Stevinson. One under par for the eight holes of the back nine, Stevinson had the misfortune to come to grief on the 406-yard eighteenth, where he used up no less than six strokes.

24 Players "Break" 80.

Golf observers considered the breaking of eighty by 24 of the challengers a new District record for an opening day qualifying round. With Harry Pitt, defending champion, and Hickman Greene, Chevy Chase invitation winner, scheduled to qualify today, along with a flock of other topflighters, indications are that 76 will either get in the select circle of 16—or play off.

Bunched at 75 were Levi Yoder, of Indian Spring; M. Parker Nolan, long-driving Congressional ace, and Tommy Webb, jr., of Washington, who returned to old-time form. Nolan did some amazing shooting on the eighth and ninth holes. After starting 5—5—6, Nolan trundled in a 5-footer for a birdie deuce on the eighth ,and laid an iron second stoney for an eagle 3 on the 471-yard par 5 ninth. He came home nicely in 36.

Last Hole Is Jinx.

That this eighteenth hole was the jinx of many is evidenced by the fact that W. Bion Moore, Beaver Dam golfer, took 11 gastly strokes there to finish with 86. A 4 would have given him a 79.

Everett Johnson, Beaver Dam golfer, finished with an 8 for a 79. The committee almost disqualified him for improving his lie in a place his caddy told him was under repair. He was penalized 2 strokes.

Manor Leaders Relax at the '19th Hole'

Silas-Bezenah Prelim Fills Local Fight Card

With the signing of Sid Silas and Elmer Bezenah for a six-rounder, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday completed the supporting card for the Natie Brown-Buck Everett bout scheduled at Griffith Stadium Monday night. Silas and his opponent are welterweights.

It will be the first outdoor show of the season and much interest has been manifest in the main go since Everett took a disputed decision over Brown two weeks ago at the Auditorium. The fans also are anxious to see Kirkwood Burke, local amateur, make his professional debut. Burke is down for a four-rounder with Harry Vetra, a promising heavyweight.

Little's score was even more remarkable in view of the fact his card contained sixes on the seventh and twelfth holes, where he three-putted. Excluding those holes, Little used his putter only 22 times on the other 13. With the exception of the eleventh hole, where his tee shot strayed off line and landed in the soft turf of a tree nursery patch, Little drove with accuracy and length, outdistancing Smith, who won the championship four years ago, on an average of 20 yards.

The defending champion's victory brought to a climax an otherwise uneventful second round. At least there were no such upsets as spangled the opening day when the field was almost denuded of favorites — McClean, Hector Thomson and C. Ross Somerville falling by the wayside.

Less prominent American entries —John Forsman, of New York; Robert W. Knowles, jr., of Brookline, Mass.; Guy Hayes, of North Andover, Mass., and Robert A. Stranahan, of Toledo, Ohio—passed out of the championship, but on the brighter side was the impressive victory of T. Suffern (Tommy) Tailer, jr., of Piping Rock, Long Island, and another by Capt. A. Bullock Webster, of Monterey, Calif. He defeated Bruce Thompson, 3 and 2. Robert Sweeney, a former New Yorker now living in London, also pulled through with a victory.

Tailer Beats Jamieson.

Tailer, who drew a first-round bye, had the clubhouse tongues wagging after he exploded a bunch of 3s and 4s to paralyze his opponent on the tough incoming stretch as he conquered Andrew Jamieson, jr., former Scottish champion, 4 and 3. The last six holes Tailer was two under par, holing out from 60 feet on the thirteenth, and from 30 feet on the fifteenth. He won three of the first four holes and then floundered to the turn and dissipated his early margin.

Tailer and Richard M. (Dick) Chapman, of Greenwich, Conn., who has progressed through two rounds without swinging a club, but has made a fine impression in practice, may meet in the fourth round. To bring this about Tailer must beat Eric Fiddian, a former finalist and member of the last two British Walker Cup teams, and Chapman must get past W. H. Elkins, a Briton, tomorrow.

Two Are Idle.

Little has other strong American reinforcements in Harvey Shaffer of New York and Dan R. Topping of Greenwich, Conn., who were idle today and will play their second round matches tomorrow. Chapman meets Earl Watson and Topping has been matched against Ernest Millard.

At least three of the defeated Americans did not go down without a struggle. Knowles, playing in the championship for the first time, carried M. Parkinson to the twentieth green before bowing out; Stranahan lost to D. Coates, 2 up; and Hayes, and American student in a German university, dropped a 2-to-1 decision to Dr. M. B. Maccallum. Forsman was beaten in a one-sided 5-to-4 match by I. Lyle.

Let's Go Fishing . . .

By M. W. Meier.

THE weather man promises better things for today, with a gradually rising temperature and winds shifting toward the west. But it will take two or three days of clear sunshine before fishing conditions really improve.

Most of the dyed-in-the-wool trout fishermen are tackling work these days and giving the streams a rest. Brooklets are all too high and the water too turbulent to make trips worth while for other than sheer excercise.

Most every point on the bay is producing a few hardhead, trout and pan-size rock but the strings are not much to brag about. There is a sprinkling of blues now all over the lower bay, and they are showing up in the nets of commercial fishermen. A few have been caught in the mouth of the Potomac and up as far as Piney Point. They should be reported in the Wicomico, most any time now.

Conditions Not Good.

Good-sized stripers have been taken in coastal waters of most of the Virginia streams, but conditions are far from right. The waters are cloudy and high and anglers have to work overly hard to get results. Some chaps don't mind that—and others do.

Good-sized trout, fair-sized blues and whopping big channel bass are being taken along the coast from Cape Charles up as far as Bethany Beach. Porgies are also being reported and no end of flounder.

The weather has been tough all along the coast since last Saturday and fishing conditions won't be prime for several days. By the coming week-end, however, most ocean locations should be good—at least, they will pay happy "dividends."

Practice Casting.

MEMBERS of the Capital Casting Club call attention to their practice casting meets every Saturday afternoon, from 2 o'clock at the Lincoln reflecting pool, Seventeenth street side. Later on, they will also hold Wednesday evening meets.

Visitors are always welcome and urged to bring along their fly and bait rods. There are no fees and amateur casters are sure to derive some profit from the friendly competition.

Rappahannock Report.

FROM Heathville, Va., comes a report that angling is now excellent in the Rappahannock River. We have no confirmation on this and you will have to "believe it or not."

The report says that fishermen in the vicinity of Irvington are preparing for the best season they have had in years, with sportsmen coming into the Northern Neck section from all parts of the State. Boats are available. We know nothing of this section, so you will have to use your own judgment. Early last week, we were informed that good-sized rock had been taken from the mouth of the river.

Giant Referee To Subdue Rasslers

McNamara Chosen to Hand Zaharias - Dusek Battle Here.

TWO HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS of toughness, representing all that is physical of one Jim McNamara, athletic director of the Jewish Community Center, will endeavor to keep the peace at the Audiforium tomorrow night when George Zaharias and Emil Dusek start throwing each other about the rafters.

McNamara was hired as referee for the rassle in spite of a request from brother Rudy Dusek that an out-of-town official be hired so that the representative of his clan would be sure of getting a fair deal.

Promoter Joe Turner opined that he had every confidence that McNamara was a fair and impartial referee and added that, considering Big Jim's proportions, the grapplers had better be pretty good boys. The Community Center mentor allowed as how that he wanted peace if they wanted peace, but that he was ready for any contingency and would joyfully participate in any kind of match Zaharias and Dusek cared to put on.

Al Bisignano faces Pat McKay, and Scotty Dawkins battles Jack Donovan in two supporting one-fall features, while Tom Alley and Frank Bronowicz clash in the opening 30-minute time-limit set-to.

Games This Week.
Eastern vs. Roosevelt, at Eastern Stadium, Friday, 3:30 p. m.

By John R. Vosburg.

EASTERN HIGH'S commonplace ball diamond looked like the land of plenty for Central High-hatters yesterday. The boys fattened their batting averages in almost gluttonous fashion, leading three Western pitchers to the slaughter in the process. The upshot of the whole bloody business was an 18-to-2 triumph for Central.

It was a rather empty victory despite the fact that Central filled it in with 18 hits including a couple of home runs. It failed to affect the fight for the championship so far as Central is concerned, the Mount Pleasanters having dropped their first two series games to pass long ago into the limbo of the also-rans. For Western, however, it ended what faint hopes might have existed that the Red Sox were destined to sail into a tie with Roosevelt for second place.

These hopes were rudely dashed without a great deal of delay. Before the first few minutes of the three-hour affair had passed, Shorty Chumbris, the Central lead-off man, had tripled; Brick Hays had singled, Walter Smith had slammed a home run into the center-field hedge, Lefty Chumbris had singled, Joe Moran had doubled and Don Dunlap had singled, to accumulate four runs.

Dan Cleary, the victim of all this, was relieved by Ted Kinsman, but Central drove out the reinforcements in the fourth inning after adding five more runs in the second and three in the fourth. Bob Rafferty, young Western sophomore, went the remainder of the route a trifle more successfully.

In the meantime, Lefty Rowles, poker-faced Central southpaw, was unraveling the Red Sox in a steady stream, holding them to seven hits, striking out 11 and walking but one in a nice pitching performance.

Nats Pay $50,000 For Buck Newsom

the St. Louis Club stuck to that figure throughout the negotiations.

Griffith attempted to include one of his pitchers in the trade for Newsom and thus cut down on the cash outlay, but Manager Rogers Hornsby would deal only for cash.

The trade for Newsom followed hard on the heels of a previous deal consummated by the Browns earlier in the day when Hornsby sold Pitcher George Blaeholder to the Athletics in exchange for Pitcher Merritt Cain and Outfielder Ed Coleman. It is believed that Hornsby held up the deal for Newsome until the Philadelphia trade was completed on the promise that the Athletics would get a portion of the cash paid the Browns by Griffith.

Hornsby Says $60,000.

Conflicting reports as to the sum that exchanged hands for Newsom were made yesterday. Hornsby stated to St. Louis newspapermen that the Washington Club had paid $60,000 for the eccentric right-hander in contrast to Griffith's declaration that $50,000 was the sum.

Yesterday's deal is the latest of a long list of trades between the Nats and the Browns in recent years. The Washington and St. Louis clubs have been the most prolific traders in the American League in that period. Such as Heinie Manush, Goose Goslin, Al Crowder, Fred Schulte, Walter Stewart, Irving Hadley and Dick Coffman have been obtained from the Browns by the Nats within the past five years.

In its deals with Washington the Browns have received Goose Goslin Muddy Ruel, Tom Zachary, Luke Sewell, Carl Fischer, Sammy West and Dick Coffman. Goslin and Coffman were twice exchanged by the two clubs.

Homer by Ruth Aids Boston Victory

Braves Beat Cubs, 4-1, as Carleton's Spell Is Broken.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, May 21.—Babe Ruth hit his first home run in more than a month and contributed a couple of nice running catches today as the Boston Braves broke Tex Carleton's two-year spell over them and beat the Cubs, 4 to 1, to even the series at one game apiece.

The Babe's homer, his third circuit blow and the eighth hit of his new National League career, came at the start of the sixth inning and sailed over the right field wall. Randy Moore followed the Babe with the Braves' second homer. A double by Mallon and two passes finished Carleton, who had entered the arena boasting a string of seven consecutive victories over the Braves. The last previous time he was defeated by them was September 9, 1933. He beat them six times as a Cardinal last year and once as a Cub two weeks ago.

Ruth batted four times before giving way to a relief fielder after six and a half innings. He bounced to the mound and flied to the outfield twice in his other appearances at the plate.

Massanutten Streak Is Broken by Woodstock

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodstock, Va., May 21.—Woodstock checked the undefeated march of the Massanutten Academy, 7-3, in the first of a three-game series here today. Sheetz, Woodstock tosser, emerged the winning pitcher by holding the Cadets to six scattered hits.

Woodstock snatched the lead, after trailing the Purple and Gold nine, 3-0, in the fourth, when they blasted Hollis, Cadet moundsman, for five runs. Copps' circuit clout in the fifth marked the first of the season. Sine, for Woodstock, and Blymler, for the Cadets, were outstanding in the field. The second game of the series is slated for Friday.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

THAT was a smart deal Clark Griffith put over when he bought Buck Newsom from the St. Louis Browns for the cheap price of $50,000 yesterday. The smartness of the deal and the cheapness of the price was revealed by no less an authority than Buck Newsom himself.

POVICH.

Buck's a card. Before Griffith and Bucky Harris could congratulate him on his good fortune in getting away from a perennial tail-end club, Newsom had 'em both by the hand yesterday in Griffith's little stucco office, congratulating 'em for strengthening their ball club. "I'm a fair hitter, too," he assured Griffith and Harris. "Not bad up there with that stick—not bad at all."

It seems that the Nats have acquired quite a potent package in this fellow Newsom, who's joined up with 'em. And he'll do nothing that will impair Griffith's reputation for corralling all the clowns in the big leagues. There were Altrock, Schacht and Art Shires, and now there's Newsom, who's a show out there on the mound with his screwy wind-up. On the field he speaks with little or no provocation whatsoever, and before he can be unquoted, he's probably told you what a great pitcher he is.

This tall, black-browed, good-looking fellow can pitch, too, and you don't have to hear him tell it. The record books tell a flattering story of what he has done in both the minor leagues and majors. He says he had the best fast ball in the league, and those 135 strikeouts last year attest to something. They landed him third among the league's strikeout artists in 1934.

BUCK'S a radio announcer, too. He had his own program out in St. Louis when the Browns were home, but that's not where he learned to talk. He was babbling at birth, to hear him tell it. Anyway, I'm going to turn the rostrum over to Buck, who was telling me all about himself yesterday:

"Don't let my record with the Browns this year fool you. It was criminal the way I lost ball games. Take that 14-inning affair with Cleveland on the opening day of the season. The Indians took it, 2 to 1, when our boys couldn't score a run for me. I pitched a game against Detroit after that and was allowing 'em only four hits for seven innings, but they had a 6-0 lead, all on unearned runs. That, my friend, is tough.

"Some day I'm going to have some luck, though. How about that game up in Boston last year. I pitch a no-hitter, no kidding, for nine innings and then get beat in the tenth when a ball takes a bad hop over the shortstop's head. That's a no-hit game that didn't even get into the record books. Honest, Boston didn't have a hit until that tenth inning.

"But that sort of thing can't keep up. You know, I've got the fastest ball in the American League, and when I start fogging 'em in there with a ball club behind me, there's no telling how many games I'm gonna win. It'll be at least 20 for Washington this year, even with my bad start, I ought to win that many. I ain't blaming the Browns, but I'll have a ball club behind me now.

"I'LL help this ball club. Boy, am I tickled to be playing with 'em. You know I was voted the most valuable player in every league I've been in, except this league. Back in Wilmington, No'th Cahlina, in 1928, Gabby Street said I'd never be a pitcher because I didn't have a curve, ha, ha. I win 15 games and lost 6 for Wilmington that year and help him win the pennant. I didn't need no curve.

Brooklyn grabbed me for their Macon farm the next season and I win 19 and lose 18 for a last-place ball club. How's that? What am I at the end of the season but the most valuable player in the league? Brooklyn took me back before the season ended and I end up by pitching 72 games that year, 67 for Macon and 5 for Brooklyn. I'm a work horse, all right.

"But the Dodgers send me back to Macon in '30, and I pitch that last-place club into the pennant before they call me back and give me another shot at the big leagues. I had a salary fuss with 'em and they traded me to Kansas City and Rogers Hornsby drafts me for the Cubs at the end of the '31 season.

"Hornsby liked me, but I was wild, so at the end of the season he sells me to Los Angeles in the Coast League. That winter I fall down a mountain in No'th Cah'lina with my car and turn over three times in a 225-foot drop, but I only get a broken leg. Then a mule kicks me out on Catalina Island where I'm training with the Cubs and breaks my leg in two other places. But that don't stop me.

"NO sir, that don't stop me. I end up the season with the Albany Club, but Los Angeles gets me back in 1933. Then I begin to go. I was hot stuff in that Coast League. Win 30 games and lose only 8 for 'em and pitch 'em into the pennant. They voted me the most popular player out there and then they voted me the most valuable player in the league. I always was popular. As a matter of fact, they pick the Coast League's all-star team for the past 25 years out there and I'm the pitcher on it.

"Hornsby always did like me and so when he goes to the Browns, he drafts me for the Coast. I only cost him $7,000, the draft price, and he sells me today for $50,000. I guess I did right by him all right, but you gotta like Hornsby. There's a man for you."

Three Teams Tied for First in Maryland Tri-county Loop.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

FREDERICK, Md., May 21.—Frederick defeated Jefferson, 18 to 8; Brunswick nosed out Point of Rocks, 8 to 6; Middletown downed Mount Airy, 11 to 8; Church Hill ran away with Wakefield, 17 to 1; Walkersville set back Cedar Grove, 6 to 3, and Damascus overwhelmed New Market, 34 to 4 in the third round of the Tri-County League, embracing Frederick, Carroll and Montgomery Counties.

The victories moved Brunswick, Middletown and Damascus on even terms for first place in the pennant race, with New Market second and Walkersville, Frederick and Mount Airy third, one game removed from second place. Metal Stocks Lead Upward Market Swing

Industrials Also Move Forward; Rails and Utilities Hesitant.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 21.—Today's stock market performance represented a widening of the ripple of buying in industrials and specialties which got under way in the previous session.

While rails and utilities reflected Wall street's attitude of interested waiting for Washington legislative developments, buying was active in selected groups, including chemicals, nonferrous metals, building stocks, oils and refrigeration issues. In all of these divisions there were representatives in the no longer exclusive new-high-for-1935 club.

Activity broadened considerably in the stock market, with turnover at 1,139,380 shares. The Associated Press average for 60 stocks advanced .2 of a point to 40, but the 30 industrial issues used in the compilation were .6 of a point up at 58.9.

The fifth successive rise in lead prices in a week or so, and the opinion expressed to stockholders of American Smelting Co. by the chairman that a further rise in the domestic price of copper could be expected attracted an active following into the metals group. Magma Copper lifted to a new peak for the year with an advance of 2½ points to 34 and St. Joe Lead was ahead more than a point in new high ground at 19⅜. Fractional advances were registered by Anaconda and Kennecott at a point or so below their best levels for 1935.

Short Covering Raises Wheat

Low Point of Season Is Reached Before Buying Rallies Price.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 21.—A short covering movement developed in the wheat pit toward the close of the session today and sent prices higher. Corn, which had sagged with wheat earlier in the day, failed to find a restorative, and was further affected by sales against purchases of wheat, and so closed lower.

Wheat closed firm, ⅛ to ⅝ of a cent above yesterday's finish, July, 90¼@90⅜, and corn closed ½ to 1¾ down, July, 81¼@81⅜. Oats closed ⅛ to ¼ lower and provisions were 8 to 15 cents higher.

May wheat established a new seasonal low at 88¾ before the rally began. The corn trade was largely local and professional. Oats were featureless, following corn mostly, with no news and only favorable crop reports. Provisions responded to the rise in hog values. Trade was active, but profit taking acted as a restraining influence.

Steel Ingot Output Highest Since 1930

New York, May 21.—Steel ingot production for the first four months of 1935 exceeded all comparative totals since 1930, with operations reaching the year's peak at 51.61 per cent of capacity in February, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute. The February rate climaxed successive monthly increases since September, 1934, when the lowest operating ratio in 18 months was touched at 22.74 per cent. That wider schedules were general throughout the industry was indicated by the average weekly earnings of wage workers, which were 22 per cent higher in the first quarter of 1935 than in 1934.

Trade Activity On Down Grade For Six Weeks

Industrial Conference Survey Reveals a General Decline.

New York, May 21.—Industrial activity as a whole declined during April and the first half of May, according to the regular business survey of the National Industrial Conference Board.

Output of steel, coal, petroleum and electric power was lower in April than in the preceding month. Automobile production and building contract awards increased but the improvementin both of these industries was considerably below the usual seasonal movement.

Activity in the fields of distribution and trade was also lower than in March. Total carloadings, largely because of a sharp decrease in coal traffic, declined 4.5 per cent from the level of the preceding month, and were 1.6 per cent below loadings in April, 1934.

Although the actual volume of retail trade was higher in March, the increase was not up to expectations after making allowance for Easter buying which occurred during April. The Federal Reserve Board index of department store sales, on an adjusted basis, stood at 74 (1923-1924—100) compared with 82 in March and 75 in February.

Flight of Domestic Capital From France Not Sufficient to Force Currency Devaluation; Opinion Against Lowering Gold Content of Franc Remains Strong.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, May 21.—The current weakness in the French franc on the foreign exchange markets and the heavy loss of gold by the Bank of France have come at a time when the outlook for international currency stabilization has become more promising than at any time since the London Conference broke up in July, 1933. The discount on 90-day futures contracts, calling for the delivery of francs at the end of three months, has risen to almost 3 per cent, the highest in a long time. This reflects widespread unwillingness on the part of the banks and exchange traders generally to make commitments that involve the future of the franc.

The French financial press has carried numerous articles to the effect that a devaluation of the franc will probably be consummated at the time when agreement is reached upon general currency stabilization. Hence, stabilization rumors stimulate the flight of domestic capital from France, to which may be ascribed almost entirely the current pressure on the franc. Withdrawals of foreign funds are a minor factor, since foreign balances in Paris had already been reduced virtually to the minimum required for ordinary business and financial operations. Speculative short selling was a contributing, but hardly a major, influence.

Domestic Capital Flight Stimulated.

The new flight of domestic capital from France is thus similar to that which occurred from Belgium in the latter part of March, when many Belgians transferred their capital to England or to the United States. They subsequently repaid large profits after the devaluation was consummated and they recalled their capital to Belgium. That example has made Frenchmen more "exchange-minded" than usual.

The French monetary situation, however, differs fundamentally from that of Belgium. The Bank of France is in position to sustain the effects of a serious flight of capital and maintain the stability of the franc for an extended period of time in the face of strong pressure. Possessed of a gold reserve of more than 80,000,000,000 francs, the French Central Bank could doubtless stand a loss of 15,000,000,000 francs or so and still have far more than sufficient gold to constitute an adequate metallic cover for the currency.

It seems safe to conclude, therefore, that while a domestic flight of capital constitutes the most serious strain that may be exerted upon a currency, this movement in the case of France has not proceeded to a point where the franc is in anything like immediate danger. The situation remains firmly within the control of the French authorities. Thus far they have steadfastly refused to try devaluation as a means of stimulating economic recovery.

Several reasons account for this. For one thing, the fixed income or "rentier" class is much more firmly intrenched in France than in perhaps any other country. Currency devaluation would be very obnoxious to this class, which has already suffered severely from the post-war devaluation of the franc. Furthermore, many French economists, bankers and statesmen have repeatedly asserted their belief that devaluation would do more harm than good. In particular, it would tend to raise the cost of living in the country, which would adversely affect the salaried and wage earning classes whose money incomes have been greatly reduced during the depression period.

Commodity Price Deflation Held Checked Without Devaluation.

A desire to void further deflation of domestic commodity prices, in relation to the world level, was one major influence that induced Belgium to devalue her currency earlier this year. Opponents of devaluation in France have pointed out latterly, however, that the process of commodity price deflation in that country appears to have come to a halt at the end of 1934, when the wholesale price index stood at 344. It rose to 349 for January and February, and declined again to 344 in March, chiefly under the deflationary influence of the weakness in sterling bloc that month. In April, however, the French wholesale index rose again to 346, and preliminary reports on individual prices point to a further slight rise for May.

French bankers assert that once the leading currencies of the world are stabilized and uncertainty as to the future of the franc is removed, some 30,000,000,000 francs of paper money now hoarded throughout the country, and almost 15,000,000,000 francs of hoarded gold, in addition, would flow back to the Bank of France. This would effect a condition of great ease in the money market, and thus would furnish a considerable stimulus to business recovery and advances in commodity prices without currency devaluation or other artificial intervention by the central bank or the government.

These considerations cause a number of bankers here to feel that France will certainly maintain the present parity of the franc so long as other important currencies fluctuate. Only if the flight of capital should assume far larger proportions and continue over an extended period of time may a change in this policy be forced. Furthermore, even if an Anglo-American stabilization agreement is arranged, it seems quite possible that France may retain the present parity of the franc, or devalue to only a slight extent, despite strong support within the country for a readjustment downward in the gold content of the nation's monetary unit at the time of a general return of staple currencies. While this is favored as a means of bringing the franc into better alignment with the pound and the dollar, on the basis of existing relative commodity price levels, the same result may be obtained through natural business recovery in France, it is contended in some quarters.

Safe Deposit Men to Discuss New Methods

Council's Convention to Be Held at Asbury Park, June 7 and 8

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

More efficient and profitable safe-deposit management will be sought as a result of the coming convention of the National Safe Deposit Advisory Council that will be held at Asbury Park, N. J., June 7 and 8.

Among the local bankers who are expecting to attend are Richard E. Harris, of the American Security & Trust Co.; John F. Hillyard, of the National Bank of Washington, and Albert E. Foster. All three are active members of the safe-deposit section of the District Bankers Association.

About 400 safe-deposit managers and executives, representing every safe-deposit association and virtually every State, will attend. Great emphasis will be laid on the legal problems that confront vault custodians in connection with the use and rental of safe-deposit boxes to individuals, estates and corporations.

The session will be opened by Dr. Thomas, father of Lowell Thomas, on behalf of the City of Asbury Park.

Walter P. Duvall, of Mercantile Trust Co., of Baltimore, will preside as president of the council, at this first session which will be given over to the reports of officers and committees. Followed by open forum discussions. Officers for the ensuing year will be elected.

William E. Nutting, manager of the safe deposit department of the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co., of Boston, will preside at the second session when Robert B. Hansen president of the New Jersey State Safe Deposit Association, will welcome the delegates.

The following topic will be discused by nationally known bankers: "Selling Safe Deposit Protection"—William Krieger, vice president of Ferns, Anderson, Inc., New York, Advertising specilists; "Recent Court Decisions"—Delo E. Mook, of the Cleveland Trust Co., of Cleveland, Ohio; "Vitalizing Your Vaults"—Edward S. Lubbers, vice president of the Bank of Manhattan Safe Deposit Co., of New York; "The Greatest Safe Deposit Hazard—The Disinterested Bank Officer"—Mrs. Louise S. Vogt, of the Sheridan Safe Deposit Co., in Chicago, Ill.; "The A. B. C.'s of Vault Work for New Employes"—Mr. Ralph D. Slaymaker, secretary of the Fidelity Safe Deposit Co., of Kansas City, Mo.

The last session will be combined with the regular quarterly meeting of the New Jersey State Safe Deposit Association. Past President James A. Sweeney, secretary of the Paterson (N. J.) Savings Institution, and editor of the Time Lock, will preside.

D. C. Underwriters Meet.

Members of the District Life Underwriters Association will meet for a "victory" luncheon at the Willard Hotel at 12:30 p. m. today. Results of local observances of the national "Life Insurance Week" will be announced.

Chairman Winthrop Batchelder of the drive will award prizes to the winning teams as well as the leading individuals. The quota of 1,000 applications that had been set for the week was passed on the fourth day so it is expected that the results will top the requirements by at least 50 per cent.

Annual election of the association officers will be held immediately following the luncheon.

Investment Code Transfer.

An early transfer of the investment bankers' code from the administration of the National Recovery Administration to the Securities and Exchange Commission is expected, according to informed Washington quarters.

Sentiment among investment bankers, it was revealed at a meeting of the governors of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, overwhelmingly favors retention of the fair practices code. Bankers feel, however, that, inasmuch as securities must be registered with the SEC, this body is the proper one to administer the code.

It has been indicated that officials in the NRA organization entertain the same feeling, and it is believed that recommendation will be made to the President that the transfer be made shortly.

It appears certain now that whether the NRA expires June 16 or not, the investment bankers favor retention of the code on a voluntary basis. Some suggestions had been made recently that two codes be formulated, one for dealers in corporate bonds and one for dealers in municipals, but it is understood that this plan has been dropped.

Joins G. M.- P Murphy & Co.

Walter J. Harrison, active in local financial circles for the past 20 years, has become associated with the Washington branch of G. M.-P. Murphy and Co. it was announced yesterday. He will carry on a general security business in his new capacity.

A vice president of the Commercial National Bank for 7 years, Harrison has recently been affiliated with Hemphill, Noyes & Co. here. He came to Washington in 1915 from the Peoples National Bank in Leesburg.

Born in Leesburg, Va., Harrison is a grandson of the founder and first president of the Loudoun National Bank in Leesburg. He was educated in Virginia public schools, attended Woodberry Forest Preparatory School, and later graduated from the University of Virginia.

Acetol Co. to Dissolve.

New York, May 21 (AP).—Dow, Jones & Co. says that directors of Acetol Products, Inc., will meet shortly to vote the dissolution of the company. It is expected that a payment of $9 a share will be distributed to holders of the convertible "A" stock. The stockholders recently voted to sell the company's assets to the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co.

Freight Losses Cost Roads $17,034,031

Chicago, May 21.—Payments made by the railroads for loss and damage to freight shipments while in transit totaled $17,034,031 in 1934, H. M. Moors, of Houston, Tex., chairman of the freight claim division, Association of American Railroads, told the annual convention of that division at the opening session in Chicago today. He said that while this was an increase of $1,548,591, or 10 per cent, compared with 1933, it was partly explained by an increase of carloadings and commodity prices in 1934. Loss and damage claims resulting from shipments of perishable freight, he said, is still a major problem, representing 31 per cent.

Reserve Board Deposits Rise $153,000,000

Loans and Investments Decline $76,000,000 in Week.

The Federal Reserve Board's condition statement of weekly reporting member banks in 91 leading cities on May 15 shows increases for the week of $143,000,000 in net demand deposits, $10,000,000 in time deposits and $78,000,000 in reserve balances with Federal Reserve banks, and decreases of $76,000,000 in total loans and investments and $62,000,000 in Government deposits.

Canada's Exports Rise 49 Per Cent

Striking Increase in Cattle to U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Ottawa, May 21.—With striking increases in wheat and cattle, Canada's total domestic exports in April totaled $47,314,000, as against $31,582,000 in the same month last year, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics announced today.

Wheat exports rose from $2,390,000 to $4,288,000, due largely to an increase to the United Kingdom from $1,323,000 to $3,517,000. The exports to the United States rose from $1,000 to $91,000.

Cattle exports increased from $301,000 to $1,067,000. The striking jump was due entirely to United States requirements, which, the bureau stated, increased from $23,000 to $1,064,000.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

Leading European currencies were narrowly irregular against the dollar in world exchange dealings yesterday, while Far Eastern silver moners reacted sharply as the price of bar silver was lowered.

In London the dollar was about steady at 4.91⅛ to the pound sterling, but in New York in later trading the British unit lost a little of its recent firmness, reacting ⅛ a cent at 4.91.

The dollar again improved in Paris at the equivalent of 6.582 cents to the French franc, but in New York the franc held unchanged from Monday's close at 6.58¼ cents.

Hongkong dollars lost 1.77¼ cents in New York at 29.35 cents, while Shanghai funds were .55 of a cent down at 41.20 cents. The lower quotations followed the posting of the London silver price, which was reduced 1/16d. at the equivalent of 74.74 cents an ounce.

Sugar Melt Higher.

New York, May 21 (AP).—Sugar melt of 13 United States refiners from January 1 to May 11 totaled 1,525,000 long tons, compared with 1,195,000 in the same period last year. Deliveries came to 1,375,000 tons, compared with 1,025,000 a year ago.

Premier Bonds Hold Steady; Railroads Sag

Home Loan 4s Sell Up to 101.2; Treasurys Are Unchanged.

By the Associated Press.

New York May 21.—Railroad issues continued to drift lower on the bond market today, although prime investments and utilities remained fairly steady with minor net gains predominating.

Trading picked up slightly, sales aggregating $10,538,000, par value, against $8,144,000 yesterday.

The prolonged easiness in rail bonds was attributed more to the lack of sufficient demand to absorb the scattered offerings than to any organized liquidation. Particular soft spots were Chicago & Terre Haute 5s, Erie 5s, New Haven 4s and Rio Grande Western 4s, all of which were 1 to 2 points lower.

In the industrial and utility divisions there was a more even trend and fractional changes were the rule. Bethlehem Steel 5s were an outstanding performer at 110, up 1½ on the day and International Paper 5s were a point higher at 72.

Although more active, United States Government bonds varied little from the levels of the previous day. Home Owners 4s, which have been called for redemption on July 1, lost some of the gains they recorded on Monday. After selling at 101.2 the issue dipped to 101, where it was off 3-32ds on balance. Treasury loans were unchanged to 8-32ds higher.

Narrow Range Holds Cotton

July Closes 3 Points Up, Other Months, 2 to 7 Lower.

New York, May 21.—Cotton fluctuated irregularly over a range of 4 to 8 points today. Aside from trade buying in July the market was under slight pressure. July closed 3 points higher, while other positions were 2 to 7 points net lower.

Early selling was influenced by easier Liverpool cables and by issuance of May notices against 1,000 bales. Trading was in restricted volume with prices sensitive to moderate orders either way.

Once Overs

By H. I. Phillips.

Elmer Twitchell on Walking Fish.

Dr. Hugh M. Smith, former chief of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, is back from Siam with a report of a fish that walks. Not only that, says the doctor, but it has a sense of direction and will return through its homing instinct to a given spot. Elmer Twitchell, when told of the discovery today, belittled it as old stuff.

• • • •

"Why, I have not only seen walking fish, but I've had 'em," said Elmer. "I prefer 'em to the swimming type any time, as they are easier to keep track of and make much better pets.

• • • •

"You never can quite develop the companionable spirit in a swimming fish, but with a walking fish it's different. A few long walks with it and it sheds its shyness and becomes quite chummy. There was old Royal Hiker, the best walking fish I ever owned; he got so he had to have his constitutional with me every day and we used to go on long walks together until his arches fell."

• • • •

"His what fell?" we asked Elmer.

"Arches," snapped Mr. Twitchell. "That's one thing about all walking fish; they have weak arches on account of their not being supposed to walk. These walking fish originate in those streams that dry up in summer. There's nothing for a fish to do except walk or burn. Most of 'em give up, but the tougher ones walk. I caught a couple footing it across country when I was a boy and their offspring included Royal Hiker, which liked walking so much he couldn't swim.

• • • •

"In fact we never could get him to go in paddling. I bred Royal Hiker with the famous walking catfish Gallivanting Queen and produced Hoofing Harold. Hoofing Harold was the most sensational walking fish as a yearling that the country had ever seen. He could do a mile in 1:04 3-5, but we walked him too young and he got bowlegged. A bowlegged walking fish is very hard on the eyes and I got rid of him painlessly."

"How?" we asked Elmer.

"By throwing him into a brook. He drowned, of course."

• • • •

"Did you ever hear of the sensational hiking herring, Forward March?" asked Elmer.

"No."

'He never had an equal as a salt water walking fish. He came ashore June 6, 1908, in Boston and walked across the continent, reaching San Francisco September 23 of the same year, but was killed in an attempt to better that time on a return trip."

"What happened?"

"He made the mistake of thumbing a ride from a fish-hawk," explained Elmer, breaking into tears at the recollection.

There was a reformer
Who lived in a mike;
He said, "Making sounds
Is a thing that I like;"
He talked by the day and
He squawked by the season
And nothing he said
Had rhythm or had reason.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Millions! By Harry J. Tuthill

Ah, what a relief after wandering around in that jungle for days to stagger in here and see you and Peg and Hartford and your brother Ches.
He's sickening, isn't he?
It just made my blood boil when he snarled so much while you were trying to tell us about escaping from that sultan.
Well, all millionaires snarl more or less, Jo.
Oh George, please don't start any wishy-washy argument about me letting my own brother walk all over me just because he has a little money.
How do you mean, a little? He owns this island and...
Island or no island, he can't bully me.
Blood is thicker than water. If Ches didn't have a nickel, he'd still be one of us.

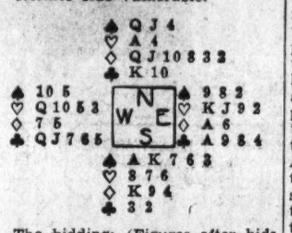
Culbertson on Bridge

Bidding Pyrotechnics.

Sometimes players will throw all rules to the wind when defending a slam contract on the theory that declarer has discounted that possibility and is figuring on a normal opening. Occasionally, such procedure proves successful, but in the majority of cases it will bring disaster.

In the hand below the normal lead would defeat the contract badly, but West erred, and declarer made his contract.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2◇(1)	Pass
2♠	Pass	4♠(2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—In the Culbertson System this takeout is a one-round force.
2—North knows that it is useless to bid merely three spades. He must decide at once whether he wants the hand to be played at game.

At several tables of a Duplicate game South played four spades, going down one in every case because the opening lead was uniformly the Queen of clubs. At one table the North-South pair had delusions of grandeur, and arrived at six spades. Alas for theory! South made contract! At this table the West player, overawed by a display of bidding pyrotechnics, feared to open from his honors in hearts or clubs. East had doubled six spades with gusto, and West rather thought that East wanted a diamond opening. West therefore started off with the diamond seven. East won with the Ace, and after a look at dummy saw no reason to be apprehensive. Instead of cashing his club Ace he boldly returned the diamond in the hope that West could ruff.

South stepped up with the King of diamonds and then took four rounds of trumps, North letting go the heart four. A parade of diamonds followed, and the end situation was very distressing to the opponents. North was left with the two clubs and the blank Ace of hearts. South held two hearts and the last trump. In order to prevent the establishment of a club trick by the lead of the King or of the ten and ruff by South of East's Ace, both opponents were obliged to hold two clubs. But if they consequently peeled down to a singleton heart each, dummy would cash the heart Ace, leaving South with a long heart and a trump for entry. There was no defense against this malevolent trump squeeze after East had failed to grab his second Ace.

Will of Mrs. Biggs Held Valid by Jury

A jury in District Supreme Court yesterday upheld validity of a will that gave Mrs. Nita Nicodemus $10,000 in cash and life income from a $90,000 estate which, on her death, is to go to Erwin H. Linton, attorney.

The will was contested on the ground that Mrs. Eleanor H. Biggs, its maker, was of unsound mind and was influenced when she made her will. After an eight-day trial before Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, the jury decided there was no undue influence and that Mrs. Biggs had favored the attorney because of his past assistance to her deceased husband.
